PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 102d CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE—Thursday, January 3, 1991

The 3d day of January being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of the Congress, the 1st session of the 102d Congress commenced this day at 12 noon.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The Senate was called to order by the Vice President.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant. And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted.—Matthew 23:11, 12.

Eternal God, without beginning or end, omnipotent and omnipresent, consecrate these Thy servants who have dedicated themselves to their high calling. Save them from the love of power which leads to arrogance and causes them to bloat rather than grow. Deliver them from self-seeking which produces demagogs and treats rhetoric as an end in itself—from personal ambition and intransigence which render the Senate an institution where the whole is less than the sum of its parts—from an elite which expects attention and favor, seeking publicity for its own sake. Help them to be faithful to their calling and commitment, remembering that the greatest leaders have been servants. Help them to remember that as representatives they are also leaders and grant that they will not sacrifice critical leadership for mindless representation.

In His name who was the Servant of servants. Amen.

CREDENTIALS—RESIGNATION AND APPOINTMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter of resignation, a certificate of appointment to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation, two certificates of election for unexpired terms, and the credentials of the 33 Senators elected for 6-year terms beginning January 3, 1991.

All certificates, the Chair is advised, are in the forms suggested by the Senate or contain all the essential requirements of the forms suggested by the Senate.

If there be no objection, the reading of the above-mentioned letter and the certificates will be waived, and they will be printed in full in the RECORD.

The documents ordered to be printed in the RECORD are as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, December 4, 1990.

Hon. DAN QUAYLE,
President of the Senate, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I herewith tender my resignation as a Member of the United States Senate from the State of New Hampshire to become effective at the close of business on Tuesday, December 4, 1990.

CONGRATULATIONS TO SENATOR THURMOND

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I will momentarily suggest the absence of a quorum so that the roll will be called and a quorum established for the purpose of beginning the proceedings of this Senate, but I believe it appropriate to note at this time for the Members of the Senate and for all Americans that Senator THURMOND has just taken the oath of office to the Senate for the eighth time.

[Applause, Senators rising.]

Mr. MITCHELL. This is one other respect in which he is unique, among many.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

The majority leader.

INFORMING THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES THAT A QUORUM OF EACH HOUSE IS ASSEMBLED

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask that it be stated and immediately considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution informing the President of the United Staes that a quorum of each House is assembled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 1) was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such commitee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF THE MAJORITY AND MINORITY LEADERS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the resolution, the majority and minority leaders are appointed as members of the committee.

INFORMING THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES THAT A QUORUM OF THE SENATE IS ASSEMBLED

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask that it be stated and immediately considered.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 2) informing the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 2) was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

FIXING THE HOUR OF DAILY MEETING OF THE SENATE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask that it be stated and immediately considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 3) fixing the hour of daily meeting of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 3) was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ELECTING MARTHA S. POPE AS THE SERGEANT AT ARMS AND DOORKEEPER OF THE SENATE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask that it be stated and immediately considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 4) electing Martha S. Pope as the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 4) was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Martha S. Pope, of the State of Connecticut, be, and she is hereby, elected Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NOTIFYING THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF THE ELECTION OF A SERGEANT AT ARMS AND DOORKEEPER OF THE SENATE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask that it be stated and immediately considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 5) notifying the President of the United States of the election of a Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 5) was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be notified of the election of the Honorable Martha S. Pope, of Connecticut, as Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

NOTIFYING THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE ELECTION OF A SERGEANT AT ARMS AND DOORKEEPER OF THE SENATE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask that it be stated and immediately considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 6) notifying the House of Representatives of the election of a Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 6) was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be notified of the election of the Honorable Martha S. Pope, of Connecticut, as Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

REAPPOINTMENT BY THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, on behalf of the President pro tempore pursuant to Public Law 95-521, reappoints Michael Davidson as Senate Legal Counsel, effective January 3, 1991, for a term to expire at the end of the 103d Congress.

RELATING TO THE REAPPOINTMENT OF MICHAEL DAVIDSON AS SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask that it be stated and immediately considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 7) relating to the reappointment of Michael Davidson as Senate Legal Counsel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 7) was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the reappointment of Michael Davidson to be Senate Legal Counsel made by the President pro tempore of the Senate this day is effective as of January 3, 1991, and the term of service of the appointee shall expire at the end of the One Hundred Third Congress.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUESTS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send to the desk en bloc 12 unanimous-consent requests and ask that they be immediately considered; that the requests be agreed to en bloc; and, that the motion to reconsider the adoption of these requests be laid upon the table.

The unanimous-consent requests, submitted en bloc, are as follows:

(1) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the 102d Congress, the Ethics Committee be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate.

(2) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the 102d Congress, there be a limitation of 15 minutes each upon any rollcall vote, with the warning signal to be sounded at the midway point, beginning at the last 7½ minutes, and when rollcall votes are of 10-minute duration, the warning signal be sounded at the beginning of the last 7½ minutes.

(3) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the 102d Congress, it be in order for the Secretary of the Senate to receive reports at the desk when presented by a Senator at any time during the day of the session of the Senate.

(4) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the majority and minority leaders may daily have up to 10 minutes each on each calendar day following the prayer and the disposition of the reading of, or the approval of, the Journal.

(5) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Parliamentarian of the House of Representatives and his three assistants be given the privilege of the floor during the 102d Congress.

(6) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the provisions of rule XXVIII, conference reports and statements accompanying them not be printed as Senate reports when such conference reports and statements have been printed as a House report unless specific request is made in the Senate in each instance to have such a report printed.

(7) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations be authorized during the 102d Congress to file reports during adjournments or recesses of the Senate on appropriation bills, including joint resolutions, together with any accompanying notices of motions to suspend rule XVI, pursuant to rule V, for the purpose of offering certain amendments to such bills or joint resolutions, which proposed amendments shall be printed.

(8) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, for the duration of the 102d Congress, the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make technical and clerical corrections in the engrossments of all Senate-passed bills and resolutions, Senate amendments to House bills and resolutions, Senate amendments to House amendments to Senate bills and resolutions, and Senate amendments to House amendments to Senate amendments to House bills or resolutions.

(9) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the 102d Congress, when the Senate is in recess or adjournment, the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to receive messages from the President of the United States, and—with the exception of House bills, joint resolutions, and concurrent resolutions—messages from the House of Representatives: and that they be appropriately referred; and that the President of the Senate, the President pro tempore, and the Acting President pro tempore be authorized to sign duly enrolled bills and joint resolutions.

(10) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the 102d Congress, Senators be allowed to leave at the desk with the Journal Clerk the names of two staff members who will be granted the privilege of the floor during the consideration of the specific matter noted, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to rotate such staff members as space allows.

(11) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the 102d Congress, it be in order to refer treaties and nominations on the day when they are received from the President, even when the Senate has no executive session that day.

(12) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that no bills or further resolutions, or Committee-reported legislation, other than those whose introduction and consideration have been agreed to by the Majority Leader, following consultation with the Republican leader, be in order prior to January 23, and I further ask unanimous consent that, beginning January 23 and for the remainder of the 102d Congress, Senators may be allowed to bring to the desk bills, joint resolutions, concurrent resolutions, and simple resolutions, for referral to appropriate committees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent requests?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, in any case, these are routine motions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HARKIN. Reserving the right to object, might the Senator inquire as to whether or not one of the resolutions en bloc to be considered is a resolution stating that no other resolutions would be introduced or considered by the Senate today?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if I might respond to the Senator's inquiry, if he would permit me to do so.

Mr. HARKIN. I yield to the Senator from Maine for that purpose.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the 12th of the series of requests does so provide. That has been standard operating procedure in the Senate for many years. In the past as all Senators know, following the constitutionally mandated convening of a new Congress, the Senate has been in recess awaiting the President's State of the Union Address and budget.

Consistent with that practice, there has developed the practice of there being no bills or resolutions introduced during that period of time. All offices were notified of this on November 30, in writing. Many offices have been in contact with the Senate floor staff, majority and minority, since then with respect to this fact.

Accordingly, this resolution provides that. This however also provides that in the event that the Senate is in session prior to the 23d which may well be, which we are going to get to in the next unanimous-consent request, that resolutions would be authorized then under the circumstances set forth in the request. And for the benefit of all of the Senators, I ask that the clerk state request No. 12. I ask unanimous consent that the clerk read request No. 12.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will restate the request.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

(12) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that no bills or further resolutions, or Committee-reported legislation, other than those whose introduction and consideration have been agreed to by the majority leader, following consultation with the Republican leader, be in order prior to January 23, and I further ask unanimous consent that, beginning January 23 and for the remainder of the 102d Congress, Senators may be allowed to bring to the desk bills, joint resolutions, concurrent resolutions, and simple resolutions, for referral to appropriate committees.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if I might further continue my response.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The majority leader has the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. The next item of business is a schedule of Senate activities in the period between now and January 23. And I will ask that be stated.

But what I am proposing, following consultation with the Speaker, the distinguished Republican leader, many Senators, is that we cancel the recess, that we come into session on a pro forma basis next week, awaiting the development of events with respect to the Persian Gulf, specifically the Secretary of State's visit, and that we assess the situation at that time; that is, sometime during next week as to when would be the appropriate time to recall the Senate for a full session for consideration of that matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HARKIN. Reserving, the right to object, Mr. President.

Mr. ADAMS. Further reserving the right to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Washington further reserves the right to object.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Iowa has the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The majority leader has the floor. The majority leader has made a unanimous-consent request. The Senator from Iowa has reserved the right to object. Does the Senator from Iowa still reserve the right to object?

Mr. HARKIN. I further reserve the right to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. On the basis that, as this Senator understands the reading of resolution No. 12, if the unanimous consent is forthcoming, if the unanimous consent is adopted, that will preclude until January 23 the introduction of any resolution by any Senator regarding the activities in the Persian Gulf unless unanimous consent is obtained to do just that.

Mr. MITCHELL. No. Mr. President, if I might interject, the Senator's statement is incorrect. I would ask the clerk to read the resolution again. It does not require unanimous consent. It requires approval of the majority leader following consultation with the Republican leader.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the majority leader desire to have the resolution read again?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> (12) Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that no bills or further resolutions, or Committee-reported legislation, other than those whose introduction and consideration have been agreed to by the majority leader, following consultation with the Republican leader, be in order prior to January 23, and I further ask unanimous consent that, beginning January 23 and for the remainder of the 102d Congress, Senators may be allowed to bring to the desk bills, joint resolutions, concurrent resolutions, and simple resolutions, for referral to appropriate committees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the resolution submitted by the majority leader?

Mr. HARKIN. I further reserve the right to object.

Mr. ADAMS. I further reserve the right to object.

Mr. HARKIN. Reserving the right to object. It is not without a heavy heart that I do so. These are not normal times. These are not the times of 6 years ago or 2 years ago. It is the time when America is facing a war. We are assembled here. We have a deadline of January 15 facing us with American men and women who may be dying in combat. I believe it is time for the Senate to debate this issue, and more specifically, to debate whether or not the President of the United States under the Constitution, must come to the Congress for the power before he can take offensive action. If we are precluded from offering this resolution today, it means that we will not be able to offer it until January 23, which I believe is unbecoming of the U.S. Senate.

We are here today. Our troops are in Saudi Arabia. Now is the time to debate it. It is being talked about in coffee shops, workplaces, homes, plants, and factories all over America; yet, we cannot discuss it and debate it today or tomorrow.

Mr. President, I have a resolution, along with Senator ADAMS and Senator BURDICK, which this Senator wishes to introduce today. Others may have their own. Now is the time and here is the place to debate the constitutional prerogatives of the President of the United States, not on January 23, but now, before January 15. That is why I reserved the right to object specifically to the 12th unanimous-consent request, understanding full well that the majority leader can preclude the offering by making a motion to adjourn the Senate. This Senator cannot stand here quietly and acquiesce to that unanimous-consent request, with all the high regard and admiration and respect I have for our majority leader. I mean that without qualification.

But this Senator cannot stand here and let this opportunity pass without raising his voice in protest on that unanimous-consent request and raising my voice that this Senate should debate this issue today and tomorrow. We are assembled; we are here. We should decide just what the constitutional prerogatives of the President are.

Mr. President, I ask that the unanimous-consent requests be separated and that each be taken up individually, rather than en bloc.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, further reserving the right to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The majority leader has the floor. He has made a unanimous-consent request for 12 resolutions.

The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. MITCHELL. First, let me state that on November 30, every Senate office received, in writing, notification of the practice which I have just set forth. Not until this moment has the Senator from Iowa, or any other Senator, chosen or seen fit to come forward and express objections. It has been the practice in the Senate for years, and everybody understands it, or surely ought to have understood it, and I just wish that if Senators have an objection to a practice that has been the case for years, with respect to which they have received written notice over a month ago, that they would have the courtesy of notifying the majority leader of their objection in advance so that we can attempt to deal with the situation. Accepting all of that, let us get to the merits of the situation.

This morning the President announced that he has proposed a meeting between the Secretary of State and the Iraqi Foreign Minister. The dates proposed are next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. I, for one, and the overwhelming majority of Senators with whom I have talked on both sides of the aisle about this subject, believe that a Senate debate on this issue would be much more productive and better informed if we knew if the meetings were going to take place, when they were going to take place, and if they take place, what occurs at the meetings.

The Senator from Iowa has repeatedly said, incorrectly, that accepting this precludes any action until the 23d. I have tried to say as clearly as I could to the contrary, that is not the case.

As I said, we are going to be in pro forma session next week. It is my expectation that we will be convening to debate this subject, but we want to do it at a time in which we can have a constructive, informed debate that advances the national interest, rather than retard it. So the statement that this is the time and this is the place is the statement of the Senator from Iowa. It may be the place. I do not believe it is the time. I believe we would be better served and best advance our Nation's interest, those who agree and disagree with the Senator's proposition, to conduct a debate at the time and in a circumstance in which we are best informed as to the current events and we know, for example, what the results of that meeting are.

So I suggest to the Senator and to all Members of the Senate that we permit the approval of this request, with the understanding and the expectation that we will be debating this subject at a time that is appropriate and when we know what is going to happen with respect to these meetings and not put ourselves in the position of possibly inadvertently undermining those meetings and the possible productive result that could follow therefrom.

Mr. HARKIN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The majority leader has the floor. Is there objection?

Mr. HARKIN. Further reserving the right to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa further reserves the right to object.

Mr. HARKIN. This Senator believes that the best time to debate the issue of Presidential prerogatives under the Constitution is before this country commits itself to war, not afterward. I have heard this resolution read twice. I would like to see it in writing. Perhaps there is something the Senator is not hearing. What the resolution says is that there will not be any resolutions until the 23d. We will be in pro forma session, I guess, and it will be up to the distinguished majority leader to decide the right time to debate this issue.

Again, with all due respect to the distinguished majority leader, this is a body of 100 Senators, each of us trying to fulfill our constitutional obligations, as we see those constitutional obligations. This Senator believes our constitutional obligations are here and now. This Senator does not, in any way, believe that debating the issue of the constitutional powers of the Presidency in any way undermines the United States of America. Never, never, never does it undermine the United States of America to assert our democratic principles and to debate the full meaning of the Constitution, especially the War Powers Act.

Now, again, reading this, it says:

> I ask unanimous consent that no bills or further resolutions or committee-reported legislation, other than those whose introduction and consideration have been agreed to by the majority leader, following consultation with the Republican leader, be in order prior to January 23.

So, therefore, no Senator would be allowed to introduce a resolution, even if we were to come back into session, unless it has been agreed to by the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator yield on that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The majority leader has the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. As the Senator very well knows, any resolution that is introduced here is fully amendable. And when we get the Senate back into session to debate this matter it is my full intention—and I have never had any intention contra—to let anybody introduce as many resolutions as he or she wants on this subject. The Senator from Iowa may be assured that he can be first in line to introduce his resolution. So I want to make clear to him that there is no effort or desire here to prevent him from introducing his resolution, no intent or desire here to prevent him from speaking or saying all he wants.

Let me say one thing finally. I resent any implication that anyone who disagrees with the proposition that the Senator from Iowa has advanced does not share his commitment to the Constitution. I have been the principal advocate saying publicly and privately to the President over and over again, as late as this morning in the meeting with the distinguished Republican leader and the Speaker, and others, that I believe the President has the constitutional obligation to come to the Congress for prior approval before launching any military offensive action in the Persian Gulf.

But the fact of the matter is everybody here knows if we introduce that resolution today and start on that debate, that is not going to be the end of it. The Senator from Iowa will be the first one to have an amendment up here. And surely he, wanting that right himself, would not deny it to anybody else. So we will have amendments on amendments, resolutions on resolutions.

There is no conceivable way to contain the debate today on the precise and narrow question of what are the President's obligations under the Constitution at this time. Everybody knows that. So what I am suggesting is a course of action which is a decision by the Speaker and myself, based on consultation with a very large number of Senators and House Members, that the best course of action would be to see what happens with respect to this meeting, then be in a position to have an informed debate and have everything out and let everybody offer resolutions who want to offer resolutions; we could not prevent it anyway and should not.

Let us get clear on two points. First, it cannot be contained to any one resolution or any narrow subject matter whenever it has begun. Second, not wanting to debate that particular issue at this particular time does not suggest any lack of or diminution of commitment to the constitutional principle involved.

The Senator and I happen to agree on that point. There are others who disagree. And we are respectful of differences of opinion here. But let us get that straight. If we start now, then we are here now; we are in the middle of debate; we have 100 resolutions; we will have all the amendments that anybody wants. And the Secretary is having a meeting presumably next week.

Is that what we want to do? Is that constructive? Is that useful? Is there any reason why we could not do that following the meeting so that we know what happened and we can have a better informed and therefore more productive debate? That is the issue I think that is before us.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The majority leader has the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The majority leader has propounded a unanimous-consent request. Is there objection?

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, this Senator wants to thank the distinguished majority leader for engaging in this colloquy and letting us have time.

Again I respond, Mr. President, as to the request that the distinguished majority leader has propounded—and perhaps after the meeting takes place next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday—that might be the appropriate time for this body to debate this resolution or any other resolutions that other Senators might want to propound, or amendments thereto.

Again, this Senator has two questions. One, will this Senate be back in session next Thursday or Friday or Saturday or Sunday? Will it be back in session before the 15th? There is nothing before the Senate that says we will. We may not be back until the 23d.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I may interject, the Senator is incorrect. I previously stated that the next unanimous-consent request I am going to seek to obtain provides specifically that the Senate be in recess until noon next Monday, and then we recess until noon on Wednesday the 9th, and then recess until noon on Friday the 11th, and then recess until noon on Monday the 14th and Wednesday the 16th, precisely for the purpose of being in a position to have that kind of debate at the appropriate time.

Mr. HARKIN addressed the Chair.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the majority leader yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under unanimous-consent request, the Senator from Iowa is reserving the right to object.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, to respond, it is one thing to be in session, that we meet in session; it is quite another thing to have a window of opportunity in which to be able to offer resolutions. That can only take place, as this Senator understands, at the end of morning business. If morning business is never attended to, then we cannot offer resolutions or amendments thereto, and once again the unanimous consent says only those whose introduction and consideration have been agreed to by the majority leader following consultation with the Republican leader be in order prior to January 23.

Again this Senator has two questions. Will the Senate be in session at an appropriate time for Senators to offer resolutions and amendments, that is, at the end of morning business; and second, will the Senate be in session to attend to resolutions and amendments thereto after next Wednesday?

Mr. MITCHELL. My intention and expectation is that we will be at an appropriate time when I make the decision based upon the events that occur between now and then.

Mr. LEAHY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes. It is my expectation and intention. But I have not made a decision precisely for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. LEAHY. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader. I yield to nobody in this body in my strong feeling that the United States should not initiate a war without a declaration of war. But I believe that the majority leader is being put in an unfair position here.

I have been in many of those meetings the majority leader has been at with the President of the United States. The majority leader has stated over and over again clearly, often with a great deal of passion, that we must have a constitutional declaration of war if we are going to have a war, and that it is his desire and intent to bring the debate and to make it possible.

The distinguished Presiding Officer has also been at many of those meetings—in fact, all of them, I believe—where the distinguished majority leader has made this position clear.

We can stand up here this afternoon and 100 of us can go off in a hundred different directions on this debate. Eventually that may well happen. Sooner or later the U.S. Senate will speak and will vote and the majority vote will carry this issue.

I believe we would all do well for the Senate and for the country to allow the majority leader to go forward with the program he has laid out. I am absolutely convinced, having been at the meeting with him, that he is providing the opportunity for all of us, whether we would vote for or against a declaration of war, to have a chance to debate. We ought to give him the opportunity to set the schedule so that we can have that debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington reserves the right to object.

Mr. ADAMS. I regret having to again reserve the right to object, but many of us have sent letters and have communicated back to the majority leader both by telephone and by letter indicating that we wish to have an opportunity to put in a resolution that would state that the President cannot carry out offensive actions without authorization of the Congress, authorization of the Congress either by declaration of war or otherwise. The timing of that vote is incredibly important.

I know the majority leader's good faith. I am a supporter of the majority leader in almost everything he does. But the difference of debating whether or not the President has the power to commit offensive actions after they have started and blood has been shed and now when we have an opportunity to say. This resolution of Senator ADAMS and Senator HARKIN is a very simple one.

It expresses the sense of Congress that Congress must approve any offensive military action against Iraq. It is not an attempt to run the war. It is a flat-out, simple statement, which is important in the President's meetings that he has with the majority leader, the meetings that he has with the others, that he knows that any offensive action is going to require a military response and that has to be authorized by Congress.

Now, we have reason for this. Many of us have seen invasion after invasion. We have seen hostilities taken. We have seen the War Powers Act absolutely decimated. And now we are talking about 500,000 American personnel facing 500,000 or more Iraq, personnel, with an effect on American foreign policy and our lives and our children's lives for 40 years. And that is dependent upon the President knowing he has to come back here. It is a separation of powers issue.

I had hoped that the majority leader would be in today with a joint resolution. That is what I expected when I heard his communication, that he would be putting forth a resolution today that we would either submit to committee or we would be debating prior to January 15.

This is not an ordinary year. This is not the year of the January 23 State of the Union Message; this is a self-imposed January 15 we either go to war or we do not type of box that the President put himself in.

I have a lot of faith in the majority leader. But he has just given over, with the minority leader—and I have not had an opportunity to talk with the minority leader to know where he is—a position that blocks all of us from trying to establish the fact that there must be either a declaration of war, statutory authorization, or appropriation of money for the President to proceed with offensive actions.

We do not know what that might be. We would be willing, if there were some kind of program that stated we will debate this before January 15, and this debate will have some parameters to it. But what we have seen and heard is that the majority leader and the minority leader will block all of us—and this could happen until after January 15, when hostilities have started—before we can have a debate.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if I may respond to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. First, I say to the Senate, the new year has started and I have to be alert when people start praising how much they trust me and how much confidence they have in me, but—spare me the trust and the confidence and get right to the point of the objections from now on.

The Senator suggests, incorrectly, that the only two choices we have are a debate today or a debate after conflict has started. That is incorrect. Let me, state it again as plainly as I can. It is my intention, my expectation, my desire, my, hope, that we will have in the Senate a full, open, vigorous debate on the subject of the Persian Gulf, not just on the Senator's resolution, but on all of the issues of the debate, on all of those that any Senator wants to offer. And under the proposal that we are laying out, that can occur at any time between now and the 15th or between now and the 23d. That is a decision that we must make based upon the events that develop, and specifically next week.

So it is not a choice, as the Senator stated, between debating now or debating after the 23d, as the Senator from Iowa stated incorrectly, or, as the Senator from Washington stated incorrectly, debating now or debating after conflict has begun. Neither of those is a correct statement of the present state of events or of my intention in this regard. The choice is, do we do it now, at a time when the Secretary of State may be about to embark on a very important trip and visit and meeting with the Iraqi Foreign Minister next week, when we do not know what is going to happen in those talks, when what we say here may affect the occurrence and the outcome of those talks, and which may produce a result, I say to my colleagues, that is precisely the opposite of that which they say they are seeking to advance?

I would like to say one thing to my colleagues. It is one thing to talk. And there is going to be plenty of time to talk today. It is another thing to advance the principle or the cause in which you believe. And there are many occasions—and I say to you this may well be one of them—where, by prematurely forcing a decision on this principle, you achieve a result that is precisely the opposite of that which you say you want to achieve. Talking is one thing. Getting a final result and a vote that you want is another thing.

I urge my colleagues to take that into account when they say, "Here is what we ought to do and when we ought to do it." If your objective is more than just to talk, if your objective is to advance the principle which you purport to want to advance, then you ought to consider the consequences of that and the timing of that.

Mr. ADAMS. Under my reservation, Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader then set a time for debate on January 12, or January 11, a day earlier, way in advance of January 15? Rather than saying it may happen, let us say it will happen. That is a fundamental point that the President must know from the Congress of the United States prior to January 15, what he is empowered to do or not empowered to do by this Congress. And that is the point of this reservation.

You give us no alternative but to come here now and say we have to have a resolution or we can be shut out. If you believe what you just stated, then give us a date for debate in advance of January 15 where we may debate this, and if we lose, we lose.

Mr. MITCHELL. But then you will have lost the position which you say you are purporting to advance.

Mr. ADAMS. My position is not a complicated position. My position is simply the constitutional position that the President cannot start offensive actions, which is war, without the Congress voting and approving that, or the declaration—call it a declaration of war; call it statutory authorization; call it what you want. It is a constitutional power, and that should be debated before January 15. Give me the date. I will be here. But the majority leader is not giving me an alternative. He is saying, "I may do it."

I love the majority leader. He is a great man. But he is going to be consulting with the minority leader; he is going to be consulting with the President. I, as one Senator, one Senator—and I guess I am joined by a second, and I hope by a majority—believe that this Congress, which has been out of session for months while this has happened, should state to the President, "You must come up here."

I know you believe it. I believe it. Maybe a lot do not believe it. But this is war, with 500,000 troops and a lot of casualties. I have heard it stated, and I believe it, by Senator INOUYE—he and I said the same thing when we left this Congress—"This looks like a shooting war." And if it is, why not tell the President that—that is all we want to do—so this is part of his calculations, that he has to get that statement of a declaration of war or an authorization of war?

Most of us may believe in something else, to use sanctions, but that is not the point here. The point here is the constitutional statement by this body prior to January 15, which the President indicates is when he is going to start shooting, that we have to authorize that. I think that is fundamental to the life of the people in this country, it is fundamental of this institution, and it is fundamental of the Congress as a whole, Mr. Majority Leader.

So I plead with the majority leader, either give us a date, or I am going to object to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I might, first, just so there can be no misunderstanding, I believe the Senator has mischaracterized the President's position. I do not believe the President has stated he is going to start shooting on January 15. I believe the President has said over and over again that January 15 is the date by which the withdrawal must occur, and that after that—no specified time—after that he believes that all means necessary will and should be used.

Now, just in fairness, we ought not to be permitting that kind of characterization which the Senator has stated.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the majority leader agree that there is some basis for my characterization that the President has indicated a use of force after that date? I mean, this is not something I have dreamed up.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is different from saying he is going to start shooting on January 15. That is fundamentally different and we ought to state it accurately, particularly on a matter of such gravity.

Mr. ADAMS. The probability or possibility the authorization—all of the keys have gone to January 15. I did not select that date out of the air. I selected it because that is what he is keyed on.

I am not trying to run his war for him because he may have it on one day or another. But I just know that after January 15, he says he can start shooting, and the Congress has to move before that date.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). The majority leader has the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. I withdraw request No. 12.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that requests 1 through 11 be approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERREY). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KOHL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, previously scheduled for this afternoon were a briefing for all Senators on the Persian Gulf situation at 3:15 p.m., to be followed by a party caucus. Those have been on the schedule for some weeks. We will now be proceeding to those functions. In the meantime, it is my hope that we can work out the matter with respect to the question of resolutions. So following consultation with Republican leader and with other Senators, I will momentarily seek consent to have the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair. It is my expectation that we will return, if the briefing lasts an hour and the caucus lasts an hour, both of which are reasonable, based upon past practice, about sometime between 5 and 6 or thereabouts when we would be in a position to come back in and proceed to resolve the issue that arose prior to the recent quorum call. I hope that we will be able to have that resolved in a satisfactory manner to all Senators.

In the interim, to permit the briefing and the party caucuses to occur as previously scheduled, I ask unanimous consent—I withhold my request at this moment.

Mr. FORD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the signer assigned to the Sergeant at Arms office be allowed the privilege of the floor, beginning from 12 noon this date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. I thank the Chair.

THE PERSIAN GULF CRISIS

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, amidst George Bush's bellicose rhetoric toward Iraq, two charges are frequently heard: First, that Congress is playing it both ways—all criticism and no stand; and second, that we must move prompty to war lest the American people lose their interest in liberating Kuwait.

From the outset of this crisis, I have counseled that we must recall the lessons of the Vietnam war. In September, I stated that we should Arabize this confrontation before we lose a single GI. The history of this region teaches us that by winning, we could lose. Our policy must be long range rather than shortsighted.

Far from people losing interest in the Persian Gulf, it strikes me that people are only now beginning to examine this situation with a sense of urgency, and I can tell you that they do not support President Bush's policy of going to war soon after January 15. By the same token, I strongly dissent from the proposition that if President Bush starts a war without constitutional or congressional authority, the Congress should cut off funding. We only have one President. If he commands war, we must support our troops in the gulf and oppose any move to cut off funds. But I do oppose the President's giving that command at this time.

A word of caution from my days as an artilleryman in the North African desert nearly five decades ago: No matter how well the gun is aimed, if the recoil is going to kill you, you had better not fire. I take a lot of pride in the courage and can-do professionalism of American troops in the Persian Gulf. Likewise, I believe we owe it to those brave men and women to approach a war with Iraq with no illusions and no wishful thinking. As we count down to a potential January 15 D-day, bear in mind two lessons from our Vietnam misadventure:

Before we ask our youth to make the supreme sacrifice in battle, the American people—through unified action of the Congress and the President—must be together on the call.

You cannot impose a culture through the barrel of a gun.

President Bush acted correctly in preventing Saddam from advancing into Saudi Arabia. Congress by formal resolution approved this deployment and also approved sanctions against Iraq. At that time, President Bush counseled patience, and cautioned that sanctions would take 1 to 2 years to work. But on November 8, the day after election day, without consultation much less approval from Congress, the President committed the United States to deploying a huge offensive force in the Persian Gulf. In August, we were there to defend. But in November we were there to initiate a war. The President says our cause is to punish naked aggression. Senate Republican leader ROBERT DOLE says the reason is not aggression, but oil. Secretary of State James Baker says the reason is jobs.

It is an ancient truth that those who ignore the mistakes of history are doomed to repeat them. For centuries, the Arab nation has been in a state of civil war: Algeria versus Morocco; Libya versus Egypt; Syria versus Lebanon; Syria versus Iraq; Iraq versus non-Arab Iran; Egypt vesus Saudi Arabia; Yemen versus Saudi Arabia, and, from the time both countries were carved out by Britain, Iraq versus Kuwait. Yet for all these internecine hatreds, the Arab nation does agree on one thing: The Islamic religion, and the status of Westerners as unholy infidels. And, by the way, we Americans are the No. 1 infidels, and our culture is an affront to everything devout Moslems hold dear.

Our culture is for freedom, human rights, individualism, dissent, and free elections. Free elections simply don't exist in the Arab world. The Islamic notion of human rights is that when a child steals an apple, he gets his hand cut off. Human rights is treating their camels better than their women.

American Presidents have a hard time learning these cultural lessons. Lyndon Johnson dreamed he could get the South Vietnamese to fight for our idea of democracy. We poured money into Vietnam to win hearts and minds. But the Vietnamese culture rejected us as foreign occupiers—as infidels, if you will—and after 58,000 dead, we withdrew.

For decades, American policymakers viewed Iran and the Shah's regime as our bulwark in the Middle East. The United States military, the CIA, and American business all had a special relationship with Iran. Iranian cadets trained at Citadel. But all this was smashed overnight in 1979 as Iran's traditional Islamic culture reasserted itself. Today, you can count on one thing; Iranians despise the United States infidels and cheer our every setback.

President Bush's political rhetoric of—to use his own words—"kicking ass" entails what Gen. Colin Powell calls a sudden, massive, violent strike, with countless thousands of Iraqis killed. Such a wholesale slaughter of brother Arabs by infidels would quickly break up the hollow coalition of Western and Arab states arrayed against Saddam. Arab public opinion would be united in revulsion and outrage. Every Arab terrorist, every fundamentalist mullah, every anti-American zealot, would take heart. Instead of a new world order, we will create a new world disorder. This is what Admiral Crowe had in mind when he warned that by winning, the United States could lose.

Iraq has asserted claims on Kuwait from its birth. They were one country under the Ottoman Empire. At the end of World War I, the British took Kuwait on as a protectorate—for oil. When Iraq started to invade Kuwait in 1961, the British sent troops. The oil fields of Al Raudhatain and Sabriya have operated under a joint Iraqi-Kuwaiti claim. For years, Iraq has accused Kuwait of cheating by drilling into the Iraqi portion of the oil fields. This dispute came to a climax at the end of the Iran-Iraq war 2 years ago. Both Saudi Arabia and Kuwait made massive loans to Iraq to finance the 8-year war. Saudi Arabia forgave its share of the debt, saying that Iraq had protected the Arab world from the threat of Iranian radicalism. But Kuwait insisted that Saddam pay up $20 billion. This claim wrecked Iraqi's finances, and led Saddam to attack.

On July 27, Saddam called in April Glaspie, the United States Ambassador to Iraq. When asked the United States position on the Iraq-Kuwait dispute, Glaspie answered: "The United States has no position on the territorial disputes between Arab countries." Given this indifference or ambivalence prior to August 2, Saddam must have been surprised when, after the invasion, President Bush belatedly declared Kuwait's integrity to be a vital national interest of the United States, justifying war and the loss of American lives.

If it is now U.S. policy to militarily oppose naked aggression anywhere in the world, then the 82d Airborne is going to be a very busy group of men and women for years to come. Three weeks ago, there was Libyan-backed naked aggression against Chad; we sent military planes to evacuate friendly Libyan troops, but not to punish naked aggression. There is naked aggression in Afghanistan, in Cambodia, on the Indian-Pakistani border, but no United States intervention. One month ago, there was naked aggression by Syria against Lebanon—a massacre of 900 Christians—but no United States intervention. It is absurd to think that the United States can or should intervene to punish aggression unless our vital national interest is directly at stake. Our national interest was not at stake in Kuwait when Ambassador Glaspie—following clear instructions from the State Department—had her chat with Saddam in July. And it is not at stake today.

Militarily, the only sane approach to freeing Kuwait is not a frontal assault on fortified Iraqi positions, but a flanking action requiring incursions into Iraq in order to attack the occupation army from its rear. Yet all of our Arab allies, and Turkey as well, have made it clear that they will not participate in an attack into Iraq.

The Reagan-Bush policy has been one of wooing Saddam for the past 5 years. The United States subsidized sales of wheat to Iraq to the tune of over $5 billion. Helped by the savings from these food purchases, Iraq built a huge military. The United States Senate acted on July 25 to deny further agricultural credits to Iraq, but the Bush administration opposed this move. During the floor debate, a Senate delegation that had recently returned from Iraq characterized Saddam as "a man who is rational and a man who can be reasoned with."

This same Saddam Hussein is now called the new Hitler by President Bush. The trouble is that the Middle East is chock full of actual or potential Hitlers. To draw a more complete analogy to the 1930's, you could characterize Qadhafi of Libya as Hitler, Assad of Syria as Stalin, and Saddam as Mussolini. If we remove Saddam, there are countless clones behind him. Yes, we would all love to get rid of Saddam, as well as his chemical, biological, and nuclear weapons, but experts warn of the disastrous long-term consequences of humiliating an Arab country through total military defeat. Yet how we can remove Saddam and his exotic arsenal without first inflicting a total military defeat is beyond me.

President Bush attempts to stir our righteous indignation by pointing out that Saddam has used his military to attack two of his neighbors in the last 10 years. But that is precisely the charge leveled against the United States by the United Nations General Assembly, which twice in the last decade has condemned the United States for invading another country—Grenada in 1983, Panama in 1989. Incidentally, in both instances, Kuwait voted in the United Nations to condemn the American invasions. This shouldn't surprise us, because Kuwait has voted against United States positions in the United Nations more often than the Soviet Union.

Kuwait, bathed in unearned oil wealth, was indolent, arrogant, and spoiled. When attacked, most of its army cut and ran. NBC recently reported that 300,000 Kuwaitis have now relocated to Saudi Arabia, and only a pathetic 7,000 have volunteered to fight for the liberation of their country. The Kuwaiti Government's idea of resistance is to hire a top-dollar public relations firm, Hill and Knowlton, to sell the American public on liberating Kuwait. The United States got unsold on Kuwait in 1987, when we were flagging that nation's oil tankers to ensure their safe passage through the Persian Gulf during the Iran-Iraq war. When the U.S.S. Stark was hit, the injured sailors could not be taken to hospitals in nearby Kuwait. Kuwait refused to allow a United States vessel to dock in Kuwaiti ports, or for United States planes to land on Kuwaiti soil.

If Kuwait's major export were tangerines, we would not today have upward to 400,000 GI's in the Persian Gulf area. We are there for oil, pure and simple. And we need not be. The United States has more oil than Saudi Arabia. Under Republican and Democratic administration alike in the 1970's, the United States pursued a policy of energy independence. But when President Reagan and Vice President Bush came to town, they moved to abolish the Department of Energy. "Let the market forces operate" was the cry. Imagine that! Let the Arab-dominated OPEC cartel have free rein. And now we are asked to sacrifice GI's for one of the greediest members of that cartel, Kuwait. Kuwait cut off oil shipments to the United States in 1967 and 1973, and doubled the price in 1979.

When President Bush began deploying troops in August, he was asked about the need for a U.S. energy policy. He replied that he was going on a ride in his 1-mile-a-gallon cigarette boat. The message: no need for conservation. In September, when Senators proposed stricter automobile fuel efficiency standards, a measure that would have saved a quantity of oil equal to the daily production of Iraq and Kuwait combined, the Bush administration opposed the bill. Surely, we should make a minimum sacrifice at home before we ask our boys to make the supreme sacrifice in Kuwait.

We should immediately institute a tough, long-range policy of energy independence. This policy should include an oil import tax as an incentive for domestic drilling, tougher automobile fuel economy standards, other fuel conservation measures, incentives for coal-fired energy production, greater reliance on nuclear power, plus more aggressive drilling offshore and in Alaska. Today, however, we are not primarily dependent on Middle Eastern oil. Japan, Germany, other European countries are. Yet apparently even they do not perceive that Kuwait is worth fighting over.

We have stopped Saddam and are willing to keep our Air Force and Navy on station in the gulf region. Face it, Uncle Sam is broke. We urgently need to rebuild America, not Kuwait.

Let the sanctions work. In the meantime, we can stand ready to punish Saddam with overwhelming air power. General Dugan was right, and he never should have been fired. But first and foremost, let us urgently Arabize this latest dispute among Arab nations. This is a family fight, and infidels are fools if they think they can step in and set things straight.

Let Arab forces gradually replace our own troops in Saudi Arabia. Then make a standing offer that if Arab forces want to go in to free Kuwait, we will support them with our air and naval power. But it must be an Arab initiative. And any war must be principally Arab versus Arab if we are to avoid disaster in the long-run for United States interests. Let us bear in mind that as outsiders—worse, as infidels in Arab eyes—we can never succeed in imposing our will on the Arab world, and we court tragedy if we try.

PERSIAN GULF

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, rarely in the history of the Nation has a new Congress convened at a more ominous moment. Hundreds of thousands of American troops are poised for war in the Persian Gulf. America today faces the most profound decision that any country ever makes—whether to go to war against another nation.

The oath of office that President Bush took 2 years ago and that the new Senators have just taken is a solemn commitment to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. Two hundred years ago, when the Founding Fathers wrote that Constitution, they bestowed the power to declare war on Congress, not the President. And any President who is faithful to the Constitution will abide by that fundamental principle.

All of us welcome the administration's new offer today to seek a diplomatic settlement and bring about a peaceful resolution of the current impasse. The world continues to be united against Iraq's aggression and in support of the unconditional withdrawal of Iraq from Kuwait. Once that withdrawal is achieved, the door is open to address all other issues in the region.

But the American people are far from united on the question of going to war against Iraq on the January 15 timetable set by the President. President George Bush is not King George Bush. He does not have the unilateral authority to take this Nation into war. By refusing to seek congressional authorization for offensive action, the President is acting unconstitutionally and irresponsibly. He may threaten Iraq with war in the gulf, but he is also threatening America with our worst constitutional crisis since the Civil War.

Yesterday, I released a letter signed by 127 of the Nation's most distinguished law professors, representing a broad philosophical spectrum and stating their "firm conviction that the Constitution requires the President to obtain prior express congressional authorization before he may order U.S. Armed Forces to make war in the Persian Gulf." I expect that many more authorities on the Constitution will sign the letter in the coming days. This is a time when all Americans who care about the Constitution must stand up and be counted.

President Bush stubbornly insists that he needs no authorization from Congress to take the Nation into war. But saying so does not make it so. Perhaps the President can scrounge up a scholar or two to defend his indefensible position. But the overwhelming weight of the evidence is against him. And for good reason, because the President is wrong—dead wrong—and thousands of American soldiers may soon be dead because of him.

When the Founding Fathers wrote the Constitution, they recognized the danger that unrestrained Presidential power can lead the Nation into unwise wars which the people do not support. As a result, they carefully divided the war making power between Congress and the President. Article II of the Constitution makes the President the Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces. Article I gives Congress, and only Congress, the power to declare war—no ifs, ands, or buts.

Much has been made of the so-called 211 past incidents in which the United States has used force abroad without a declaration of war, compared to five instances in which war was declared. But none of these cases resemble the unprecedented situation in the Persian Gulf, in which 400,000 American troops may soon go to war.

The vast majority of these past cases were brief incidents involving small expeditions to protect U.S. citizens in danger or to attack pirates.

In 1813, 600 United States soldiers seized Mobile Bay in Florida against a small Spanish garrison.

In 1820, U.S. naval units raided the slave traffic.

In 1825, United States forces landed in Cuba to capture pirates.

We sent troops to the Fiji Islands in 1840 to punish natives for attacking American explorers.

We sent troops to the Hawaiian Islands in 1870 to place the American flag at half mast upon the death of a Hawaiian Queen, when the American consul refused to do so.

And so it goes. Such incidents are worthless as constitutional precedents for the grave crisis we now face in the Persian Gulf. You do not have to be a constitutional lawyer to understand the difference. Presidents have the authority to protect American lives and defend American property. But they do not have the authority to go to war in the vastly different circumstances we face in the gulf.

Unless President Bush provides an ironclad assurance that he will seek the authority of Congress before going to war against Iraq, Congress has its own responsibility to act. We cannot remain silent.

My own view is that we should enact legislation giving sanctions and diplomacy more time to work. No one knows whether sanctions will drive Saddam out of Kuwait. But we have a responsibility to our 400,000 troops and their families to find out.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the previously mentioned letter, along with a CRS report detailing the instances of use of U.S. Armed Forces abroad over the last 200 years, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 2, 1991.

Senator Edward M. Kennedy,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: We, the undersigned law professors, write to express our firm conviction that the Constitution requires the President to obtain prior express congressional authorization before he may order United States armed forces to make war in the Persian Gulf. We write to affirm our belief in this fundamental constitutional principle, not to express our views on the wisdom of any contemplated action.

Article I, §8, cl. 11 of the Constitution states that "Congress shall have Power * * * [t]o declare War." Although Article II, §2, cl. 1 names the President as "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy," we believe that the President may not invoke that authority to make war without consulting with and gaining the genuine approval of Congress.

The structure and history of our Constitution compel this sharing of responsibility. Like other presidential powers, executive power to conduct war remains subject to the checks and balances vested by the Constitution in Congress and the courts. "This system" in James Wilson's words, "will not hurry us into war; it is calculated to guard against it. It will not be in the power of a single man, or a single body of men, to involve us in such distress; for the important power of declaring war is vested in the legislature at large * * *." 2 The Debates in the Several State Conventions on the Adoption of the Federal Constitution 528 (J. Elliot ed. 1888).

The fact that American troops have in the past participated in hostilities abroad without congressional authorization does not alter this fundamental constitutional principle. The essential meaning of a constitutional provision cannot be altered by inaction on the part of prior Congresses or Presidents.

The Constitution thus requires that the President meaningfully consult with Congress and receive its affirmative authorization before engaging in acts of war. We further believe that Congress must manifest its approval through formal action, not legislative silence, stray remarks of individual Members, or collateral legislative activity that the President or a court might construe to constitute "acquiescence" in executive acts.

We hope that our views will assist you and your colleagues as you prepare to discharge your constitutional responsibilities in this critical time for our Nation.

Sincerely,*

[CRS Report for Congress, Dec. 4, 1989]

INSTANCES OF USE OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES ABROAD, 1798–1989[1]

(Edited by Ellen C. Collier, Specialist in U.S. Foreign Policy, Foreign Affairs and National Defense Division)

The following list indicates approximately 215 times that the United States has utilized military forces abroad in situations of conflict or potential conflict to protect U.S. citizens or promote U.S. interests. The list does not include covert actions or numerous instances in which U.S. forces have been stationed abroad since World War II in occupation forces or for participation in mutual security organizations, base agreements, or routine military assistance or training operations. Because of differing judgments over the actions to be included, other lists may include more or fewer instances.[2]

The instances vary greatly in size of operation, legal authorization, and significance. The number of troops involved range from a few sailors or Marines landed to protect American lives and property to hundreds of thousands in Vietnam and millions in world War II. Some actions were of short duration and some lasted a number of years. In some instances a military officer acted without authorization; some actions were conducted solely under the President's powers as Chief Executive or Commander in Chief; other instances were authorized by Congress in some fashion; five (listed in bold-face type) were declared wars. For most of the instances listed, however, the status of the action under domestic or international law has not been addressed. Thus inclusion in this list does not cannote either legality or significance.

1798–1800—Undeclared Naval War with France. This contest included land actions, such as that in the Dominican Republic, city of Puerto Plata, where marines captured a French privateer under the guns of the forts.

1801–05—Tripoli. The First Barbary War, including the George Washington and Philadelphia affairs and the Eaton expedition, during which a few marines landed with United States Agent William Eaton to raise a force against Tripoli in an effort to free the crew of the Philadelphia. Tripoli declared war but not the United States.

1806—Mexico (Spanish territory). Capt. Z. M. Pike, with a platoon of troops, invaded Spanish territory at the headwaters of the Rio Grande deliberately and on orders from Gen. James Wilkinson. He was made prisoner without resistance at a fort he constructed in present day Colorado, taken to Mexico, later released after seizure of his papers.

1806–10—Gulf of Mexico. American gunboats operated from New Orleans against Spanish and French privateers, such as La Fitte, off the Mississippi Delta, chiefly under Capt. John Shaw and Master Commandant David Porter.

1810—West Florida (Spanish territory). Gov. Claiborne of Louisiana, on orders of the President, occupied with troops territory in dispute east of Mississippi as far as the Pearl River, later the eastern boundary of Louisiana. He was authorized to seize as far east as the Perdido River.

1812—Amelia Island and other parts of east Florida, then under Spain. Temporary possession was authorized by President Madison and by Congress, to prevent occupation by any other power; but possession was obtained by Gen. George Matthews in so irregular a manner that his measures were disavowed by the President.

1812–15—War of 1812. On June 18, 1812, the United States declared war between the United States and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

1818—West Florida (Spanish territory). On authority given by Congress, General Wilkinson seized Mobile Bay in April with 600 soldiers. A small Spanish garrison gave way. Thus U.S. advanced into disputed territory to the Perdido River, as projected in 1810. No fighting.

1818–14—Marquesas Islands. Built a fort on island of Nukahiva to protect three prize ships which had been captured from the British.

1814—Spanish Florida. Gen. Andrew Jackson took Pensacola and drove out the British with whom the United States was at war.

1814–25—Caribbean. Engagements between pirates and American ships or squadrons took place repeatedly especially ashore and offshore about Cuba, Puerto Rico, Santo Domingo, and Yucatan. Three thousand priate attacks on merchantmen were reported between 1815 and 1823. In 1822 Commodore James Biddle employed a squadron of two frigates, four sloops of war, two brigs, four schooners, and two gunboats in the West Indies.

1815—Algiers. The second Barbary War, declared by the opponents but not by the United States. Congress authorized an expedition. A large fleet under Decatur attacked Algiers and obtained indemnities.

1815—Tripoli. After securing an agreement from Algiers, Decatur demonstrated with his squadron at Tunis and Tripoli, where he secured indemnities for offenses during the War of 1812.

1816—Spanish Florida. United States forces destroyed Nicholls Fort, called also Negro Fort, which harbored raiders making forays into United States territory.

1816–18—Spanish Florida—First Seminole War. The Seminole Indians, whose area was a resort for escaped slaves and border ruffians, were attacked by troops under Generals Jackson and Gaines and pursued into northern Florida. Spanish posts were attacked and occupied, British citizens executed.

1817—Amelia Island (Spanish territory off Florida). Under orders of President Monroe, United States forces landed and expelled a group of smugglers, adventurers, and freebooters.

1818—Oregon. The U.S.S. Ontario, dispatched from Washington, landed at the Columbia River and in August took possession. Britian had conceded sovereignty but Russia and Spain asserted claims to the area.

1820–23—Africa. Naval units raided the slave traffic pursuant to the 1819 act of Congress.

1822—Cuba. United States naval forces suppressing piracy landed on the northwest coast of Cuba and burned a private station.

1823—Cuba. Brief landings in pursuit of pirates occurred April 8 near Escondido; April 16 near Cayo Blanco; July 11 at Siquapa Bay; July 21 at Cape Cruz; and October 23 at Camrioca.

1824—Cuba. In October the U.S.S. Porpoise landed bluejackets near Matanzas in pursuit of pirates. This was during the cruise authorized in 1822.

1824—Puerto Rico (Spanish territory). Commodore David Porter with a landing party attacked the town of Fajardo which had sheltered pirates and insulted American naval officers. He landed with 200 men in November and forced an apology.

1825—Cuba. In March cooperating American and British forces landed at Sagua La Grande to capture pirates.

1827—Greece. In October and November landing parties hunted pirates on the islands of Argenteire, Miconi, and Androse.

1831–32—Falkland Islands. To investigate the capture of three American sealing vessels and to protect American interests.

1832—Sumatra—February 6 to 9. To punish natives of the town of Quallah Battoo for depredations on American shipping.

1833—Argentina—October 31 to November 15. A force was sent ashore at Buenos Aires to protect the interests of the United States and other countries during an insurrection.

1835–36—Peru—December 10, 1835 to January 24, 1836, and August 31 to December 7, 1836. Marines protected American interests in Callao and Lima during an attempted revolution.

1836—Mexico. General Gaines occupied Nacogdoches (Tex.), disputed territory, from July to December during the Texan war for independence, under orders to cross the "imaginary boundary line" if an Indian outbreak threatened.

1838–39—Sumatra—December 24, 1838 to January 4, 1839. To punish natives of the towns of Quallah Battoo and Muckie (Mukki) for depredations on American shipping.

1840—Fiji Islands—July. To punish natives for attacking American exploring and surveying parties.

1841—Drummond Island, Kingsmill Group. To avenge the murder of a seaman by the natives.

1841—Samoa—February 24. To avenge the murder of an American seaman on Upolu Island.

1842—Mexico. Commodore T.A.C. Jones, in command of a squadron long cruising off California, occupied Monterey, Calif., on October 19, believing war had come. He discovered peace, withdrew, and saluted. A similar incident occurred a week later at San Diego.

1843—China. Sailors and marines from the St. Louis were landed after a clash between Americans and Chinese at the trading post in Canton.

1843—Africa—November 29 to December 16. Four United States vessels demonstrated and landed various parties (one of 200 marines and sailors) to discourage piracy and the slave trade along the Ivory coast, etc., and to punish attacks by the natives on American seamen and shipping.

1844—Mexico. President Tyler deployed U.S. forces to protect Texas against Mexico, pending Senate approval of a treaty of annexation. (Later rejected.) He defended his action against a Senate resolution of inquiry.

1846–48—Mexican War. On May 13, 1846, the United States declared war with Mexico.

1849—Smyrna. In July a naval force gained release of an American seized by Austrian officials.

1851—Turkey. After a massacre of foreigners (including Americans) at Jaffa in January, a demonstration by the Mediterranean Squadron was ordered along the Turkish (Levant) coast.

1851—Johanns Island (east of Africa)—August. To exact redress for the unlawful imprisonment of the captain of an American whaling brig.

1852–53—Argentina—February 3 to 12, 1852; September 17, 1852 to April 1853. Marines were landed and maintained in Buenos Aires to protect American interests during a revolution.

1853—Nicaragua—March 11 to 13. To protect American lives and interests during political disturbances.

1853–54—Japan. The "opening of Japan" and the Perry Expedition.

1853–54—Ryukyu and Bonin Islands. Commodore Perry on three visits before going to Japan and while waiting for a reply from Japan made a naval demonstration, landing marines twice, and secured a coaling concession from the ruler of Naha on Okinawa; he also demonstrated in the Bonin Islands with the purpose of securing facilities for commerce.

1854—China—April 4 to June 15 to 17. To protect American interests in and near Shanghai during Chinese civil strife.

1854—Nicaragua—July 9 to 15. San Juan del Norte (Greytown) was destroyed to avenge an insult to the American Minister to Nicaragua.

1855—China—May 19 to 21. To protect American interests in Shanghai. August 3 to 4 to fight pirates near Hong Kong.

1855—Fiji Islands—September 12 to November 4. To seek reparations for depredations on Americans.

1855—Uruguay—November 25 to 29. United States and European naval forces landed to protect American interests during an attempted revolution in Montevideo.

1856—Panama, Republic of New Grenada—September 19 to 22. To protect American interests during an insurrection.

1856—China—October 22 to December 6. To protect American interests at Canton during hostilities between the British and the Chinese; and to avenge an unprovoked assault upon an unarmed boat displaying the United States flag.

1857—Nicaragua—April to May, November to December. To oppose William Walker's attempt to get control of the country. In May Commander C.H. Davis of the United States Navy, with some marines, received Walker's surrender and protected his men from the retaliation of native allies who had been fighting Walker. In November and December of the same year United States vessels Saratoga, Wabash, and Fulton opposed another attempt of William Walker on Nicaragua. Commodore Hiram Paulding's act of landing marines and compelling the removal of Walker to the United States, was tacitly disavowed by Secretary of State Lewis Cass, and Paulding was forced into retirement.

1858—Uruguay—January 2 to 27. Forces from two United States warships landed to protect American property during a revolution in Montevideo.

1858—Fiji Islands—October 6 to 16. To chastise the natives for the murder of two American citizens.

1858–59—Turkey. Display of naval force along the Levant at the request of the Secretary of State after massacre of Americans at Jaffa and mistreatment elsewhere "to remind the authorities (of Turkey) of the power of the United States."

1859—Paraguay. Congress authorized a naval squadron to seek redress for an attack on a naval vessel in the Parana River during 1855. Apologies were made after a large display of force.

1859—Mexico. Two hundred United States soldiers crossed the Rio Grande in pursuit of the Mexican bandit Cortina.

1859—China—July 31 to August 2. For the protection of American interests in Shanghai.

1860—Angola, Portuguese West Africa—March 1. To protect American lives and property at Kissembo when the natives became troublesome.

1860—Colombia, Bay of Panama—September 27 to October 8. To protect American interests during a revolution.

1863—Japan—July 16. To redress an insult to the American flag—firing on an American vessel—at Shimonoseki.

1864—Japan—July 14 to August 3. To protect the United States Minister to Japan when he visited Yedo to negotiate concerning some American claims against Japan, and to make his negotiations easier by impressing the Japanese with American power.

1864—Japan—September 4 to 14. To compel Japan and the Prince of Nagato in particular to permit the Straits of Shimonoseki to be used by foreign shipping in accordance with treaties already signed.

1865—Panama—March 9 and 10. To protect the lives and property of American residents during a revolution.

1866—Mexico. To protect American residents, General Sedgwick and 100 men in November obtained surrender of Matamoras. After 3 days he was ordered by U.S. Government to withdraw. His act was repudiated by the President.

1866—China—June 20 to July 7. To punish an assault on the American consul at Newchwang; July 14, for consultation with authorities on shore; August 9, at Shanghai, to help extinguish a serious fire in the city.

1867—Nicaragua. Marines occupied Managua and Leon.

1867—Island of Formosa—June 13. To punish a horde of savages who were supposed to have murdered the crew of a wrecked American vessel.

1868—Japan (Osaka, Hiolo, Nagasaki, Yokohama, and Negata)—February 4 to 8 April 4 to May 12, June 12 and 13. To protect American interests during the civil war in Japan over the abolition of the Shogunate and the restoration of the Mikado.

1868—Uruguay—February 7 and 8, 19 to 26. To protect foreign residents and the customhouse during an insurrection at Montevideo.

1868—Colombia—April. To protect passengers and treasure in transit at Aspinwall during the absence of local police or troops on the occasion of the death of the President of Colombia.

1870—Mexico—June 17 and 18. To destroy the pirate ship Forward, which had been run aground about 40 miles up the Rio Tecapan.

1870—Hawaiian Islands—September 21. To place the American flag at half mast upon the death of Queen Kalama, when the American consul at Honolulu would not assume responsibility for so doing.

1871—Korea—June 10 to 12. To punish natives for depredations on Americans, particularly for murdering the crew of the General Sherman and burning the schooner, and for later firing on other American small boats taking soundings up the Salee River.

1873—Colombia (Bay of Panama)—May 7 to 22, September 23 to October 9. To protect American interests during hostilities over possession of the government of the State of Panama.

1873—Mexico. United States troops crossed the Mexican border repeatedly in pursuit of cattle and other thieves. There were some reciprocal pursuits by Mexican troops into border territory. The cases were only technically invasions, if that, although Mexico protested constantly. Notable cases were at Remolina in May 1873 and at Las Cuevas in 1875. Washington orders often supported these excursions. Agreements between Mexico and the United States, the first in 1882, finally legitimized such raids. They continued intermittently, with minor disputes, until 1896.

1874—Hawaiian Islands—February 12 to 20. To preserve order and protect American lives and interests during the coronation of a new king.

1876—Mexico—May 18. To police the town of Matamoras temporarily while it was without other government.

1882—Egypt—July 14 to 18. To protect American interests during warfare between British and Egyptians and looting of the city of Alexandria by Arabs.

1885—Panama (Colon)—January 18 and 19. To guard the valuables in transit over the Panama Railroad, and the safes and vaults of the company during revolutionary activity. In March, April, and May in the cities of Colon and Panama, to reestablish freedom of transit during revolutionary activity.

1888—Korea—June. To protect American residents in Seoul during unsettled political conditions, when an outbreak of the populace was expected.

1888—Haiti—December 20. To persuade the Haitian Government to give up an American steamer which had been seized on the charge of breach of blockade.

1888-89—Samoa—November 14, 1888, to March 20, 1889. To protect American citizens and the consulate during a native civil war.

1889—Hawaiian Islands—July 30 and 31. To protect American interests at Honolulu during a revolution.

1890—Argentina—A naval party landed to protect U.S. consulate and legation in Buenos Aires.

1891—Haiti—To protect American lives and property on Navassa Island.

1891—Bering Strait—July 2 to October 5. To stop seal poaching.

1891—Chile—August 28 to 30. To protect the American consulate and the women and children who had taken refuge in it during a revolution in Valparaiso.

1893—Hawaii—January 16 to April 1. Ostensibly to protect American lives and property; actually to promote a provisional government under Sanford B. Dole. This action was disavowed by the United States.

1894—Brazil—January. To protect American commerce and shipping at Rio de Janeiro during a Brazilian civil war. No landing was attempted but there was a display of naval force.

1894—Nicaragua—July 6 to August 7. To protect American interests at Bluefields following a revolution.

1894-95—China. Marines were stationed at Tientsin and penetrated to Peking for protection purposes during the Sino-Japanese War.

1894-95—China. Naval vessel beached and used as a fort at Newchwang for protection of American nationals.

1894-96—Korea—July 24, 1894 to April 3, 1896. To protect American lives and interests at Seoul during and following the Sino-Japanese War. A guard of marines was kept at the American legation most of the time until April 1896.

1895—Colombia—March 8 to 9. To protect American interests during an attack on the town of Bocas del Toro by a bandit chieftain.

1896—Nicaragua—May 2 to 4. To protect American interests in Corinto during political unrest.

1898—Nicaragua—February 7 and 8. To protect American lives and property at San Juan del Sur.

1898—The Spanish-American War. On April 25, 1898, the United States declared war with Spain.

1898-99—China—November 5, 1898 to March 15, 1899. To provide a guard for the legation at Peking and the consulate at Tientsin during contest between the Dowager Empress and her son.

1899—Nicaragua. To protect American interests at San Juan del Norte, February 22 to March 5, and at Bluefields a few weeks later in connection with the insurrection of Gen. Juan P. Reyes.

1899—Samoa—March 13 to May 15. To protect American interests and to take part in a bloody contention over the succession to the throne.

1899-1901—Philippine Islands. To protect American interests following the war with Spain, and to conquer the islands by defeating the Filipinos in their war for independence.

1900—China—May 24 to September 28. To protect foreign lives during the Boxer rising, particularly at Peking. For many years after this experience a permanent legation guard was maintained in Peking, and was strengthened at times as trouble threatened.

1901—Colombia (State of Panama)—November 20 to December 4. To protect American property on the Isthmus and to keep transit lines open during serious revolutionary disturbances.

1902—Colombia—April 16 to 23. To protect American lives and property at Bocas del Toro during a civil war.

1902—Colombia (State of Panama)—September 17 to November 18. To place armed guards on all trains crossing the Isthmus and to keep the railroad line open.

1903—Honduras—March 23 to 30 or 31. To protect the American consulate and the steamship wharf at Puerto Cortez during a period of revolutionary activity.

1903—Dominican Republic—March 30 to April 21. To protect American interests in the city of Santo Domingo during a revolutionary outbreak.

1903—Syria—September 7 to 12. To protect the American consulate in Beirut when a local Moslem uprising was feared.

1903-04—Abyssinia. Twenty-five marines were sent to Abyssinia to protect the U.S. Counsul General while he negotiated a treaty.

1903-14—Panama. To protect American interests and lives during and following the revolution for independence from Colombia over construction of the Isthmus Canal. With brief intermissions, United States Marines were stationed on the Isthmus from November 4, 1903, to January 21, 1914, to guard American interests.

1904—Dominican Republic—January 2 to February 11. To protect American interests in Puerto Plata and Sosua and Santo Domingo City during revolutionary fighting.

1904—Tangier, Morocco. "We want either Perdicaris alive or Raisula dead." Demonstration by a squadron to force release of a kidnapped American. Marine guard landed to protect consul general.

1904—Panama—November 17 to 24. To protect American lives and property at Ancon at the time of a threatened insurrection.

1904-05—Korea—January 5, 1904, to November 11, 1905. To guard the American legation in Seoul.

1904-05—Korea. Marine guard sent to Seoul for protection during Russo-Japanese War.

1906-09—Cuba—September 1906 to January 23, 1909. Intervention to restore order, protect foreigners, and establish a stable government after serious revolutionary activity.

1907—Honduras—March 18 to June 8. To protect American interests during a war between Honduras and Nicaragua; troops were stationed for a few days or weeks in Trujillo, Ceiba, Puerto Cortez, San Pedro, Laguna and Choloma.

1910—Nicaragua—February 22. During a civil war, to get information of conditions at Corinto; May 19 to September 4, to protect American interests at Bluefields.

1911—Honduras—January 26 and some weeks thereafter. To protect American lives and interests during a civil war in Honduras.

1911—China. Approaching stages of the nationalist revolution. An ensign and 10 men in October tried to enter Wuchang to rescue missionaries but retired on being warned away. A small landing force guarded American private property and consulate at Hankow in October. A marine guard was established in November over the cable stations at Shanghai. Landing forces were sent for protection in Nanking, Chinkiang, Taku and elsewhere.

1912—Honduras. Small force landed to prevent seizure by the government of an American-owned railroad at Puerto Cortez. Forces withdrawn after the United States disapproved the action.

1912—Panama. Troops, on request of both political parties, supervised elections outside the Canal Zone.

1912—Cuba—June 5 to August 5. To protect American interests on the Province of Oriente, and in Havana.

1912—China—August 24 to 26, on Kentucky Island, and August 26 to 30 at Camp Nicholson. To protect Americans and American interests during revolutionary activity.

1912—Turkey—November 18 to December 3. To guard the American legation at Constantinople during a Balkan War.

1912-25—Nicaragua—August to November 1912. To protect American interests during an attempted revolution. A small force serving as a legation guard and as a promoter of peace and governmental stability, remained until August 5, 1925.

1912-41—China. The disorders which began with the Kuomintang rebellion in 1912, which were redirected by the invasion of China by Japan and finally ended by war between Japan and the United States in 1941, led to demonstrations and landing parties for the protection of U.S. interests in China continuously and at many points from 1912 on to 1941. The guard at Peking and along the route to the sea was maintained until 1941. In 1927, the United States had 5,670 troops ashore in China and 44 naval vessels in its waters. In 1933 the United States had 3,027 armed men ashore. All this protective action was in general terms based on treaties with China ranging from 1858 to 1901.

1913—Mexico—September 5 to 7. A few marines landed at Ciaris Estero to aid in evacuating American citizens and others from the Yaqui Valley, made dangerous for foreigners by civil strife.

1914—Haiti—January 29 to February 9, February 20 to 21, October 19. To protect American nationals in a time of dangerous unrest.

1914—Dominican Republic—June and July. During a revolutionary movement, United States naval forces by gunfire stopped the bombardment of Puerto Plata, and by threat of force maintained Santo Domingo City as a neutral zone.

1914-17—Mexico. The undeclared Mexican-American hostilities following the Dolphin affair and Villa's raids included capture of Vera Cruz and later Pershing's expedition into northern Mexico.

1915-34—Haiti—July 28, 1915, to August 15, 1934. To maintain order during a period of chronic and threatened insurrection.

1916—China. American forces landed to quell a riot taking place on American property in Nanking.

1916-24—Dominican Republic—May 1916 to September 1924. To maintain order during a period of chronic and threatened insurrection.

1917—China. American troops were landed at Chungking to protect American lives during a political crisis..

1917-18—World War I. On April 6, 1917, the United States declared war with Germany and on December 7, 1917, with Austria-Hungary.

1917-22—Cuba. To protect American interests during an insurrection and subsequent unsettled conditions. Most of the United States armed forces left Cuba by August 1919, but two companies remained at Camaguey until February 1922.

1918-19—Mexico. After withdrawal of the Pershing expedition, U.S. troops entered Mexico in pursuit of bandits at least three times in 1918 and six in 1919. In August 1918 American and Mexican troops fought at Nogales.

1918-20—Panama. For police duty according to treaty stipulations, at Chiriqui, during election disturbances and subsequent unrest.

1918-20—Soviet Russia. Marines were landed at and near Vladivostok in June and July to protect the American consulate and other points in the fighting between the Bolsheviki troops and the Czech Army which had traversed Siberia from the western front. A joint proclamation of emergency government and neutrality was issued by the American, Japanese, British, French, and Czech commanders in July and the party remained until late August. In August 7,000 men were landed in Vladivostok and remained until January 1920, as part of an allied occupation force. In September 1918, 5,000 American troops joined the allied intervention force at Archangel and remained until June 1919. These operations were to offset effects of the Bolshevik revolution in Russia and were partly supported by Czarist or Kerensky elements.

1919—Dalmatia. U.S. forces were landed at Trau at the request of Italian authorities to police order between the Italians and Serbs.

1919—Turkey. Marines from the U.S.S. Arizona were landed to guard the U.S. Consulate during the Greek occupation of Constantinople.

1919—Honduras—September 8 to 12. A land force was sent ashore to maintain order in a neutral zone during an attempted revolution.

1920—China—March 14. A landing force was sent ashore for a few hours to protect lives during a disturbance at Kiukiang.

1920—Guatemala—April 9 to 27. To protect the American Legation and other American interests, such as the cable station, during a period of fighting between Unionists and the Government of Guatemala.

1920-22—Russia (Siberia)—Febraury 16, 1920, to November 19, 1922. A marine guard to protect the United States radio station and property on Russian Island, Bay of Vladivostok.

1921—Panama-Costa Rica. American naval squadrons demonstrated in April on both sides of the Isthmus to prevent war between the two countries over a boundary dispute.

1922—Turkey—September and October. A landing force was sent ashore with consent of both Greek and Turkish authorities, to protect American lives and property when the Turkish Nationalists entered Smyrna.

1922-23—China. Between April 1922 and November 1923 marines were landed five times to protect Americans during periods of unrest.

1924—Honduras—February 28 to March 31, September 10 to 15. To protect American lives and interests during election hostilities.

1924—China—September. Marines were landed to protect Americans and other foreigners in Shanghai during Chinese factional hostilities.

1925—China—January 15 to August 29. Fighting of Chinese factions accompanied by riots and demonstrations in Shanghai necessitated landing American forces to protect lives and property in the International Settlement.

1925—Honduras—April 19 to 21. To protect foreigners at La Ceiba during a political upheaval.

1925—Panama—October 12 to 23. Strikes and rent riots led to the landing of about 600 American troops to keep order and protect American interests.

1926—China—August and September. The Nationalist attack on Hankow necessitated the landing of American naval forces to protect American citizens. A small guard was maintained at the consulate general even after September 16, when the rest of the forces were withdrawn. Likewise, when Nationalist forces captured Kiukiang, naval forces were landed for the protection of foreigners November 4 to 6.

1926-33—Nicaragua—May 7 to June 5, 1926; August 27, 1926, to January 3, 1933. The coup d'etat of General Chamorro aroused revolutionary activities leading to the landing of American marines to protect the interests of the United States. United States forces came and went, but seem not to have left the country entirely until January 3, 1933. Their work included activity against the outlaw leader Sandino in 1928.

1927—China—February. Fighting at Shanghai caused American naval forces and marines to be increased there. In March a naval guard was stationed at the American consultate at Nanking after Nationalist forces captured the city. American and British destroyers later used shell fire to protect Americans and other foreigners. Subsequently additional forces of marines and naval vessels were stationed in the vicinity of Shanghai and Tientsin.

1932—China. American forces were landed to protect American interests during the Japanese occupation of Shanghai.

1933—Cuba. During a revolution against President Gerardo Machada naval forces demonstrated but no landing was made.

1934—China. Marines landed at Foochow to protect the American Consulate.

1940—Newfoundland, Bermuda, St. Lucia, Bahamas, Jamaica, Antigua, Trinidad, and British Guiana. Troops were sent to guard air and naval bases obtained by negotiation with Great Britain. These were sometimes called lend-lease bases.

1941—Greenland. Taken under protection of the United States in April.

1941—Netherlands (Dutch Guiana). In November the President ordered American troops to occupy Dutch Guiana but by agreement with the Netherlands government in exile, Brazil cooperated to protect aluminum ore supply from the bauxite mines in Surinam.

1941—Iceland. Taken under the protection of the United States, with consent of its Government, for strategic reasons.

1941—Germany. Sometime in the spring the President ordered the Navy to patrol ship lanes to Europe. By July U.S. warships were convoying and by September were attacking German submarines. In November, the Neutrality Act was partly repealed to protect military aid to Britain, Russia, etc.

1941-45—World War II. On December 8, 1941, the United States declared war with Japan, on December 11 with Germany and Italy, and on June 5, 1942, with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania.

1945—China. In October 50,000 U.S. Marines were sent to North China to assist Chinese Nationalist authorities in disarming and repatriating the Japanese in China and controlling ports, railroads, and airfields. This was in addition to approximately 60,000 U.S. forces remaining in China at the end of World War II.

1946—Trieste. President Truman ordered the augmentation of U.S. troops along the zonal occupation line and the reinforcement of air forces in northern Italy after Yugoslav forces shot down an unarmed U.S. Army transport plane flying over Venezia Giulia. Earlier U.S. naval units had been dispatched to the scene.

1948—Palestine. A marine consular guard was sent to Jerusalem to protect the U.S. Consul General.

1948-49—China. Marines were dispatched to Nanking to protect the American Embassy when the city fell to Communist troops, and to Shanghai to aid in the protection and evacuation of Americans.

1950-53—Korean War. The United States responded to North Korean invasion of South Korea by going to its assistance, pursuant to United Nations Security Council resolutions.

1950-55—Formosa (Taiwan). In June 1950 at the beginning of the Korean War President Truman ordered the U.S. Seventh Fleet to prevent Chinese Communist attacks upon Formosa and Chinese Nationalist operations against mainland China.

1954-55—China. Naval units evacuated U.S. civilians and military personnel from the Tachen Islands.

1956—Egypt. A marine battalion evacuated U.S. nationals and other persons from Alexandria during the Suez crisis.

1958—Lebanon. Marines were landed in Lebanon at the invitation of its government to help protect against threatened insurrection supported from the outside.

1959-60—The Caribbean. 2d Marine Ground Task Force was deployed to protect U.S. nationals during the Cuban crisis.

1962—Cuba. President Kennedy instituted a "quarantine" on the shipment of offensive missiles to Cuba from the Soviet Union. He also warned the Soviet Union that the launching of any missile from Cuba against any nation in the Western Hemisphere would bring about U.S. nuclear retaliation on the Soviet Union. A negotiated settlement was achieved in a few days.

1962—Thailand. The 3d Marine Expeditionary Unit landed on May 17, 1962 to support that country during the threat of Communist pressure from outside; by July 30 the 5,000 marines had been withdrawn.

1962-75—Laos. From October 1962 until 1975, the United States played a role of military support in Laos.

1964—Congo. The United States sent four transport planes to provide airlift for Congolese troops during a rebellion and to transport Belgian paratroopers to rescue foreigners.

1964-73—Vietnam War. U.S. military advisers had been in South Vietnam for a decade, and their numbers had been increased as the military position of the Saigon government became weaker. After the attacks on U.S. destroyers in the Tonkin Gulf, President Johnson asked for a resolution expressing U.S. determination to support freedom and protect peace in Southeast Asia. Congress responded with the Tonkin Gulf Resolution, expressing support for "all necessary measures" the President might take to repel armed attack against U.S. forces and prevent further aggression. Following this resolution, and following a Communist attack on a U.S. installation in central Vietnam, the United States escalated its participation in the war to a peak of 543,000 in April 1969.

1965—Dominican Republic. The United States intervened to protect lives and property during a Dominican revolt and sent more troops as fears grew that the revolutionary forces were coming increasingly under Communist control.

1967—Congo. The United States sent three military transport aircraft with crews to provide the Congo central government with logistical support during a revolt.

1970—Cambodia. U.S. troops were ordered into Cambodia to clean out Communist sanctuaries from which Viet Cong and North Vietnamese attacked U.S. and South Vietnamese forces in Vietnam. The object of this attack, which lasted from April 30 to June 30, was to ensure the continuing safe withdrawal of American forces from South Vietnam and to assist the program of Vietnamization.

1974—Evacuation from Cyprus. United States naval forces evacuated U.S. civilians during hostilities between Turkish and Greek Cypriot forces.

1975—Evacuation from Vietnam. On April 3, 1975, President Ford reported U.S. naval vessels, helicopters, and marines had been sent to assist in evacuation of refugees and U.S. nationals from Vietnam.[3]

1975—Evacuation from Cambodia. On April 12, 1975, President Ford reported that he had ordered U.S. military forces to proceed with the planned evacuation of U.S. citizens from Cambodia.

1975—South Vietnam. On April 30, 1975, President Ford reported that a force of 70 evacuation helicopters and 865 marines had evacuated about, 1,400 U.S. citizens and 5,500 third country nationals and South Vietnamese from landing zones near the U.S. Embassy in Saigon and Tan Son Nhut Airfield.

1975—Mayaguez incident. On May 15, 1975, President Ford reported he had ordered military forces to retake the SS Mayaguez, a merchant vessel en route from Hong Kong to Thailand with U.S. citizen crew which was seized from Cambodian naval patrol boats in international waters and forced to proceed to a nearby island.

1976—Lebanon. On July 22 and 23, 1974, helicopters from five U.S. naval vessels evacuated approximately 250 Americans and Europeans from Lebanon during fighting between Lebanese factions after an overland convoy evacuation had been blocked by hostilities.

1976—Korea. Additional forces were sent to Korea after two American military personnel were killed while in the demilitarized zone between North and South Korea for the purpose of cutting down a tree.

1978—Zaire. From May 19 through June 1978, the United States utilized military transport aircraft to provide logistical support to Belgian and French rescue operations in Zaire.

1980—Iran. On April 26, 1980, President Carter reported the use of six U.S. transport planes and eight helicopters in an unsuccessful attempt to rescue American hostages being held in Iran.

1981—El Salvador. After a guerilla offensive against the government of El Salvador, additional U.S. military advisers were sent to El Salvador, bringing the total to approximately 55, assist in training government forces in counterinsurgency. The number of advisers remained at the level of approximately 55 at the end of October 1989.

1981—Libya. On August 19, 1981, U.S. planes based on the carrier Nimitz shot down two Libyan jets over the Gulf of Sidra after one of the Libyan jets had fired a heat-seeking missile. The United States periodically held freedom of navigation exercises in the Gulf of Sidra, claimed by Libya as territorial waters but considered international waters by the United States.

1982—Sinai. On March 19, 1982, President Reagan reported the deployment of military personnel and equipment to participate in the Multinational Force and Observers in the Sinai. Participation had been authorized by the Multinational Force and Observers Resolution, Public Law 97–132.

1982—Lebanon. On August 21, 1982, President Reagan reported the dispatch of 80 marines to serve in the multinational force to assist in the withdrawal of members of the Palestine Liberation force from Beirut. The Marines left Sept. 20, 1982.

1982—Lebonon. On September 29, 1982, President Reagan reported the deployment of 1200 marines to serve in a temporary multinational force to facilitate the restoration of Lebanese government sovereignty. On Sept. 29, 1983, Congress passed the Multinational Force in Lebanon Resolution (P.L. 98–119) authorizing the continued participation for eighteen months.

1983—Egypt. After a Libyan plane bombed a city in Sudan on March 18, 1983, and Sudan and Egypt appealed for assistance, the United States dispatched an AWACS electronic surveillance plane to Egypt.

1983–89—Honduras. In July 1983 the United States undertook a series of exercises in Honduras that some believed might lead to conflict with Nicaragua. On March 25, 1986, unarmed U.S. military helicopters and crewmen ferried Honduran troops to the Nicaraguan border to repel Nicaraguan troops.

1983—Chad. On August 8, 1983, President Reagan reported the deployment of two AWACS electronic surveillance planes and eight F–15 fighter planes and ground logistical support forces to assist Chad against Libyan and rebel forces.

1983—Grenada. On October 25, 1983, President Reagan reported a landing on Grenada by Marines and Army airborne troops to protect lives and assist in the restoration of law and order and at the request of five members of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States.

1984—Persian Gulf. On June 5, 1984, Saudi Arabian jet fighter planes, aided by intelligence from a U.S. AWACS electronic surveillance aircraft and fueled by a U.S. KC–10 tanker, shot down two Iranian fighter planes over an area of the Persian Gulf proclaimed as a protected zone for shipping.

1985—Italy. On October 10, 1985, U.S. Navy pilots intercepted an Egyptian airliner and forced it to land in Sicily. The airliner was carrying the hijackers of the Italian cruise ship Achille Lauro who had killed an American citizen during the hijacking.

1986—Libya. On March 26, 1986, President Reagan reported to Congress that, on March 24 and 25, U.S. forces, while engaged in freedom of navigation exercises around the Gulf of Sidra, had been attacked by Libyan missiles and the United States had responded with missiles.

1986—Libya. On April 16, 1986, President Reagan reported that U.S. air and naval forces had conducted bombing strikes on terrorist facilities and military installations in Libya.

1986—Bolivia. U.S. Army personnel and aircraft assisted Bolivia in anti-drug operations.

1987–88—Persian Gulf. After the Iran-Iraq War resulted in several military incidents in the Persian Gulf, the United States increased U.S. Navy forces operating in the Persian Gulf and adopted a policy of reflagging and escorting Kuwaiti oil tankers through the Gulf. President Reagan reported that U.S. ships had been fired upon or struck mines or taken other military action on September 23, October 10, and October 20, 1987 and April 19, July 4, and July 14, 1988. The United States gradually reduced its forces after a cease-fire between Iran and Iraq on August 20, 1988.

1988—Panama. In mid-March and April 1988, during a period of instability in Panama and as pressure grew for Panamanian military leader General Noriega to resign, the United States sent 1,000 troops to Panama, to "further safeguard the canal, U.S. lives, property and interests in the area." The forces supplemented 10,000 U.S. military personnel already in Panama.

1989—Libya. On January 4, 1989, two U.S. Navy F–14 aircraft based on the U.S.S. John F. Kennedy shot down two Libyan jet fighters over the Mediterranean Sea about 70 miles north of Libya. The U.S. pilots said the Libyan planes had demonstrated hostile intentions.

1989—Panama. On May 11, 1989, in response to General Noriega's disregard of the results of the Panamanian election, President Bush ordered a brigade-sized force of approximately 1,900 troops to augment the estimated 11,000 U.S. forces already in the area.

1989—Andean Initiative in War on Drugs. On September 15, 1989, President Bush announced that military and law enforcement assistance would be sent to help the Andean nations of Colombia, Bolivia, and Peru combat illicit drug producers and traffickers. By mid-September there were 50–100 U.S. military advisers in Colombia in connection with transport and training in the use of military equipment, plus seven Special Forces teams of 2–12 persons to train troops in the three countries.

1989—Philippines. On December 1, 1989, President Bush ordered U.S. fighter planes from Clark Air Base in the Philippines to assist the Aquino government to repel a coup attempt. In addition, 100 marines were sent from the U.S. Navy base at Subic Bay to protect the U.S. Embassy in Manila.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 2,119th day that Terry Anderson has been held captive in Lebanon.

Since the adjournment of the 101st Congress, we have witnessed the release of all of the remaining hostages held in Iraq and Kuwait by Saddam Hussein. Through the Christmas season and the first days of the new year, we continue to celebrate their reunion with their families and loved ones.

Yet, in our joy over their freedom, we must not lose sight of the Americans held hostage in Lebanon. Terry Anderson is the longest held. Christmas 1990 is the sixth he has spent with his captors.

HONORING WILLIAM SISSLER

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I rise today to urge my colleagues in the U.S. Senate to join me in paying tribute to a remarkable man who has devoted years of public service to the city of Crestwood, MO. I am speaking of Mr. Charles William Sissler.

Bill has served on the Board of Alderman for over 12 years. He has contributed to the city in countless ways by helping the elderly and the poor in times of need. He is also very active in Missouri politics as a precinct captain of the Gravois Republican Organization.

In addition to his dedication to his hometown, Bill also served his country during World War II. He was one of a committee of engineers that were assigned to Pearl Harbor a few days after the tragic Japanese attack. Bill cast the deciding vote to leave the U.S.S. Arizona in its resting place in Pearl Harbor and because of this, millions of people are able to see and remember this special place that is a part of our history. He was also responsible for saving the lives of several men on board the Lexington during the Battle of the Coral Sea. As the ship sank and people evacuated, Bill stopped to check one of the chambers, and found it was full of men trapped inside. He was recognized for his valiant and heroic efforts.

Mr. President, the people of Crestwood are grateful for Bill's service, loyalty and dedication. I join his family and many friends in thanking him for decades of selfless service to his community. The city of Crestwood is indeed fortunate to have such a dedicated public servant as Charles William Sissler.

NOTICE REGARDING MASS MAILING REPORTS

Formerly Senate rule 40 of the Standing Rules of the Senate required Senators to register all mass mailings distributed during a calendar year by February 1 the succeeding calendar year. A letter to Senators dated December 14, 1990, advised the offices of a filing date of January 2, 1991, for 1990 mass mailings based upon language contained in the 1990 Congressional Handbook. The Rules Committee has subsequently notified the Secretary of the Senate that in the absence of a filing date requirement by statute or regulation, the Secretary may establish the quarterly filings dates for mass mailings as required by section 323 of the Legislative Branch Appropriations Act for 1991.

In the interest of allowing Senators' offices sufficient time in which to compile accurate and complete reports, starting with all mailings sent after October 1, 1990, mass mailings must be filed on a quarterly basis on the 25th day of the month after the close of a preceding fiscal year quarter (January 25, April 25, July 25, and October 25); and must include the number of pieces mailed for each mass mailing. The filing which will be due on Friday, January 25, 1991, must include all mass mailings for calendar year 1990. In addition, the number of pieces sent for those mailings generated between October 1 and December 31, 1990, must also be provided.

Mass mailing registrations should be filed with the Senate Office of Public Records, 232 Hart Building, Washington, DC 20510-7116. The Public Records Office will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. on the filing date to accept the filings.

RECESS SUBJECT TO THE CALL OF THE CHAIR

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if no other Senator is seeking recognition, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 2:07 p.m., recessed subject to the call of the Chair; whereupon, the Senate, at 6:58 p.m., reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. DASCHLE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 11:30 a.m. tomorrow, Friday, January 4; that following the prayer, the Journal of Proceedings be approved to date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. FORD. As a clarification, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the privilege of the floor granted earlier today to the signer assigned to the Office of the Sergeant at Arms be extended through the remainder of today's session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 11:30 A.M.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if no other Senator is seeking recognition and if the distinguished Republican leader has no further business, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess as under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6:59 p.m., recessed until Friday, January 4, 1991, at 11:30 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, January 3, 1991

This being the day fixed by the 20th amendment to the Constitution for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the Members-elect of the 102d Congress met in their Hall, and at 12 noon, were called to order by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, Hon. Donnald K. Anderson.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

May Your blessing, O gracious God, be with each person who has been given the honor and responsibility of serving in this place. Conscious of the trust given by the people of our Nation, we pray that these Representatives will be good stewards of the resources of the land and faithfully seek to do the works of justice for all the people.

May our petitions for peace, O God, be translated into the works and the reality of peace. We remember this day citizens of our Nation who serve in distant places and all others who labor for peace so that conflict will be put aside and nations will enjoy the security they earnestly seek and deserve.

We thank You, O God, for the gift of life with all its possibilities and all its joy. On this special day at the beginning of this new Congress, we dedicate ourselves to preserve and protect Your gifts to us and to all people so that justice will roll down as waters and righteousness like an everflowing stream. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The CLERK. Will the Members-elect and their guests please rise and join with us in the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag.

The Clerk led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

> I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

The CLERK. Representatives-elect, this is the day fixed by the 20th amendment to the Constitution for the meeting of the 102d Congress, and as the law directs, the Clerk of the House has prepared the official roll of the Representatives-elect.

Certificates of election covering 435 seats in the 102d Congress have been received by the Clerk of the House, and the names of those persons whose credentials show that they were regularly elected as Representatives in accordance with the laws of their respective States or of the United States will be called.

Without objection, the Representatives-elect will record their presence by electronic device and their names will be reported in alphabetical order by States, beginning with the State of Alabama to determine whether a quorum is present.

There was no objection.

The CLERK. Representatives-elect who have not obtained their voting ID cards may do so now in the Speaker's lobby.

The call was taken by electronic device, and the following Representatives-elect responded to their names:

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2

NOT VOTING—1

Murphy

☐ 1325

The CLERK. The tellers agree in their tallies that the total number of votes cast is 429, of which the Honorable THOMAS S. FOLEY of Washington has received 262 and the Honorable ROBERT H. MICHEL of Illinois has received 165, with 2 voting "present."

Therefore, the Honorable THOMAS S. FOLEY of Washington is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives for the 102d Congress, having received a majority of the votes cast.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, because of airline delays, I was inadvertantly absent for votes No. 1 and 2 earlier today. I ask that it be recorded that, had I been present, I would proudly have voted for THOMAS FOLEY as Speaker.

The CLERK. The Clerk appoints the following committee to escort the Speaker-elect to the chair: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY], the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER], the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS], and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MORRISON].

The committee will retire from the Chamber to escort the Speaker-elect to the chair.

The Doorkeeper announced the Speaker-elect of the House of Representatives of the 102d Congress, who was escorted to the chair by the committee of escort.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, and ladies and gentlemen, and sleepy grandchildren too. First, I want to thank my Republican colleagues for according me the high honor to be your leader again in this 102d Congress. Second, a formal warm welcome to the 43 new Members, 18 on our side and 25 on the Democrat side. Collectively you give us a 10-percent infusion of new blood into the House of Representatives, and we are grateful for your presence.

Third, to my colleagues on the Democrat side of the aisle, let me say that during this Congress you Democrats and we Republicans will be carrying out our responsibilities as defenders of our respective political philosophies, and that is as it should be. This is neither the proper time nor the place to develop that particular theme. However, I thought you would want to know that you will be hearing from me about these great differences, maybe as early as later on this afternoon, and yes, for some time to come.

There is a saying attributed to Thomas Jefferson that applies to the task that we will undertake. "He does best in God's great world who does best in his own little world." And this House is a little world in which we have been called upon to do our best.

We come to this House with differing points of view and all shades of political thinking. This is where those clashes of ideas are to be argued and debated openly in an atmosphere of orderliness, decorum, civility, comity and mutual respect for one another. To preside over this body we have a very able and capable man who subscribes to all of these tenets, and who has already proved to be a very fair and impartial speaker.

I would wish that every Member of this House could say as I do, I am personally proud to call TOM FOLEY my good and trusted friend. And I am highly honored, extremely honored, to present him to you as the Speaker of the House of the 102d Congress.

Mr. FOLEY. My colleagues, I am deeply grateful for the opportunity to serve again as Speaker of this House.

My particular gratitude goes in the forefront to BOB MICHEL for his generous remarks. I consider it a great honor and opportunity to serve with the distinguished Republican leader. I have served in my time with distinguished Members of Congress of every political philosophy and position. But in my judgment, no one has brought greater talent, judgment, decency, loyalty, or respect for this House and its traditions than has BOB MICHEL. And if I may, I salute the wisdom of my Republican colleagues in choosing him as their leader.

I look forward to serving with you, BOB, in the coming 2 years. And as a symbol of our friendship and of my respect for you, I am going to return this gavel to you, as long as you promise to keep it off this desk.

I wish, of course, to express my gratitude to many others: to my constituents who have done me the honor of allowing me to serve in the Congress; to my staff; to my friends; and most particularly to my wife of 22 years, Heather, who has been my constant support and my selfless friend.

I have said many times, and I know my colleagues will understand this, that serving as the Speaker of the House of Representatives is the second greatest honor of my political life. The first for each one of us in this House must be the honor of serving the constituents that do us the great honor of allowing us to serve them. And to my constituents of the Fifth District of the State of Washington I express again my gratitude and thanks for their support and their confidence.

I am mindful as well of my responsibility in this House to undertake to discharge my responsibilities as Speaker with fairness and dignity. I pledge to you to wield this gavel firmly but fairly, in accordance with our established principles, procedures, and precedents.

I also pledge to expedite the business of the House, which is after all the business of the Nation. We convene the 102d Congress in trying times, confronted by difficult—perhaps critical—choices in both domestic and foreign affairs.

In addressing these important questions of economic strength and international stability, I intend to work in every way that I can with all of you; with the President; and with the leadership of the other body. I will pursue cooperation, not conflict; reconciliation not recrimination.

There will be of course, differences. As BOB MICHEL has said so well, this is the place where we must debate those differences, where we must display them and resolve them. But I hope to resolve them with respect, not resentment and retribution.

In all that we undertake, I hope we are guided by Jefferson's dictum that our Government is founded not on the fears and follies of man, but in his reason.

We are fond of calling this the people's body. We reflect in our diversity the great values and variety of our Nation. And it is here that the American people retain their most direct share in their Government.

I believe there is no higher calling than public service and no greater career than to serve in the House of Representatives. No other office offers so many challenges and opportunities. No other profession attracts so many people of talent, skill, and dedication. No other calling offers as many opportunities to improve the circumstances and promote the dignity of our fellow citizens.

In just a few moments I will administer the oath of office to the Members of the 102d Congress. Forty-three Members will take their oath for the first time.

For those of us who have taken it before, it is always a great thrill, a great sense of accomplishment to take the oath of office. But I think we have a sense of how important it is for you, the new Members, as you, perhaps more than the rest of us, are surrounded by your family and your friends as you begin your careers here in the House of Representatives.

I know that we will all undertake this oath with a sense of pride, with the resolve to improve our Nation and protect its institutions, and to fulfill our obligations as Members of the Congress in a way that brings credit to us individually, to our constituencies and to this House; so that, in Daniel Webster's words ascribed above this desk, "We also in our own day and generation may perform something worthy to be remembered."

I am now ready to take the oath of office. I ask the dean of the House of Representatives, the Honorable JAMIE L. WHITTEN, of Mississippi, to administer the oath of office.

Mr. WHITTEN then administered the oath of office to Mr. FOLEY, as follows:

Do you solemnly swear that you will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that you will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that you take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that you will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which you are about to enter. So help you God.

(Applause, the Members rising.)

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

The SPEAKER. According to the precedent, the Chair will swear in all Members of the House at this time.

If the Members will rise, the Chair will now administer the oath of office.

The Members-elect and Delegates-elect and Resident Commissioner-elect rose, and the Speaker administered the oath of office to them, as follows:

Do you solemnly swear that you will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that you will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that you take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that you will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which you are about to enter. So help you God.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman and gentlewomen are now Members of the 102d Congress. Congratulations.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

MAJORITY LEADER

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Democratic Caucus, I have been directed to report to the House that the Democratic Members have elected as majority leader of the House the gentleman from Missouri, the Honorable RICHARD A. GEPHARDT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS].

MINORITY LEADER

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Republican Conference, I am directed by that conference to officially notify the House that the gentleman from Illinois, the Honorable ROBERT H. MICHEL, has been selected as minority leader of the House.

MAJORITY WHIP

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Democratic Caucus, I have been directed to report to the House that the Democratic Members have selected the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the Honorable WILLIAM H. GRAY III, to act as majority whip.

MINORITY WHIP

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Republican Conference, I am directed by that conference to notify the House officially that the Republican Members have elected as our minority whip the gentleman from Georgia, the Honorable NEWT GINGRICH.

ELECTION OF CLERK OF THE HOUSE, SERGEANT AT ARMS, DOORKEEPER, POSTMASTER, AND CHAPLAIN

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 1) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 1

Resolved, That Donnald K. Anderson, of the State of California, be, and he is hereby, chosen Clerk of the House of Representatives;

That Jack Russ, of the State of Maryland, be, and he is hereby, chosen Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives;

That James T. Molloy, of the State of New York, be, and he is hereby, chosen Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives;

That Robert V. Rota, of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, chosen Postmaster of the House of Representatives;

That Reverend James David Ford, of the Commonwealth of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, chosen Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to the resolution, but before offering the amendment, I request that there be a division of the question on the resolution so that we may have a separate vote on the Chaplain.

The SPEAKER. The question will be divided.

The question is on agreeing to that portion of the resolution providing for the election of the Chaplain of the House of Representatives, the Reverend James Ford.

That portion of the resolution was agreed to.

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. LEWIS OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the remainder of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. LEWIS of California for the remainder of House Resolution 1: Strike out all after the resolving clause, and insert:

That William R. Pitts, Jr., of the Commonwealth of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, chosen Clerk of the House of Representatives;

The Walter P. Kennedy, of the State of New Jersey, be, and he is hereby, chosen Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives;

That Ronald W. Lasch, of the Commonwealth of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, chosen Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives;

That Jay Pierson, of the State of Maryland, be, and he is hereby, chosen Postmaster of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS].

The amendment in the nature of a substitute for the remainder of the resolution was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the remainder of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

The remainder of the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Chair will now swear in the officer of the House.

The officers-elect presented themselves at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. Congratulations. You are now elected officers of the House of Representatives of the 102d Congress.

NOTIFICATION TO SENATE OF ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 2) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 2

Resolved, That the Senate be informed that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled; that Thomas S. Foley, a Representative from the State of Washington, has been elected Speaker; and Donnald K. Anderson, a citizen of the State of California, has been elected Clerk of the House of Representatives of the One Hundred Second Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF THE ASSEMBLY OF THE CONGRESS

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 3) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 3

Resolved, That a committee of two Members be appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with a committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House has assembled and Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as members of the committee on the part of the House to join a committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House has been assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO INFORM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF THE ELECTION OF THE SPEAKER AND THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 4) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 4

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to inform the President of the United States that the House of Representatives has elected Thomas S. Foley, a Representative from the State of Washington, Speaker; and Donnald K. Anderson, a citizen of the State of California, Clerk of the House of Representatives of the One Hundred Second Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. RES. 1

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

S. RES. 2

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

S. RES. 6

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be notified of the election of the Honorable Martha S. Pope, of Connecticut, as Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 5) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 5

Resolved, That the Rules of the House of Representatives of the One Hundred First Congress, including all applicable provisions of law and concurrent resolutions adopted pursuant thereto which constituted the Rules of the House at the end of the One Hundred First Congress, be, and they are hereby, adopted as the Rules of the House of Representatives of the One Hundred Second Congress, with the following amendments included therein as part thereof, to wit:

(1) In rule I, amend clause 9(a) by adding at the end the following: "Any such telecommunications function shall be subject to rules and regulations issued by the Speaker.".

(2) In rule X, amend clause 1(e)(1) by striking "One Hundred First Congress" in both instances and inserting "One Hundred Second Congress".

(3) In rule X, amend clause 1(q) by repealing paragraph (2) and redesignating paragraphs (3) and (4) as paragraphs (2) and (3), respectively.

(4) In rule X, amend clause 1(t) by striking "title I of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978" and inserting "titles I and V of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 and sections 7342, 7351, and 7353 of title 5, United States Code".

(5) In rule XI, amend clause 2(a) by striking "the Congress convenes" and inserting "the committee is elected".

(6) In rule XI, amend clause 2(d) to read as follows:

"Vice chairman or ranking majority Member to preside in absence of chairman

"(d) The member of the majority party on any standing committee or subcommittee thereof ranking immediately after the chairman shall be vice chairman of the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be, and shall preside at any meeting during the temporary absence of the chairman. If the chairman and vice chairman of the committee or subcommittee are not present at any meeting of the committee or subcommittee, the ranking member of the majority party who is present shall preside at that meeting.".

(7) In rule XI, amend clause 2(e)(6) by—

(A) striking the second parenthetical; and

(B) striking out the period at the end of the first sentence and everything in the second sentence preceding the colon and inserting the following: ", or as provided by section 305(a)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 in the case of a concurrent resolution on the budget".

(8) In rule XII, amend the title to read as follows:

"Resident Commissioner and Delegates"

(9) In rule XVI, amend clause 4 by striking the last two sentences and inserting the following: "It shall be in order at any time during a day for the Speaker, in his discretion, to entertain motions that (1) the Speaker be authorized to declare a recess; and (2) when the House adjourns it stand adjourned to a day and time certain. Either motion shall be of equal privilege with the motion to adjourn provided for in this clause and shall be determined without debate.".

(10) In rule XXI, add at the end the following new clause:

"8. It shall not be in order to consider a bill, joint resolution, or conference report providing, increasing, or decreasing receipts or direct spending (as defined in section 250(c) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985), unless the conference report or bill or joint resolution as reported contains the following statement of law: "The applicable cost estimate of this Act for all purposes of sections 252 and 253 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 shall be as follows: .". The blank shall be filled with a cost estimate provided by the Congressional Budget Office (prepared in consultation with the Joint Committee on Taxation where appropriate pursuant to section 201(g) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974). The cost estimate shall be in writing and shall be signed, and shall contain an estimate of the amount of the change in outlays or receipts, as the case may be, in each fiscal year through fiscal year 1995, resulting from the conference report or bill or joint resolution as reported.".

(11) In rule XXIII, amend clause 2 by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(c) In the Committee of the Whole, the Chairman may, in his discretion, reduce to not less than five minutes the period of time within which a rollcall vote by electronic device may be taken without any intervening business or debate on any or all pending amendments after the vote has been taken on the first pending amendment.".

(12) In rule XXIV, amend the third proviso of the fifth sentence of clause 7 by—

(A) striking out "during any one session of Congress" and inserting "during any one session of a Congress"; and

(B) striking out "at the next session of Congress" and inserting "at the next session of that Congress".

(13) In rule XXVII, amend the following by—

(A) deleting clause 2;

(B) striking "or has been seconded pursuant to clause 2 of this rule" in clause 3;

(C) striking the third sentence in the third undesignated paragraph of clause 4 and inserting: "If the motion prevails to discharge the Committee on Rules from any resolution pending before the committee, the House shall immediately consider such resolution, the Speaker not entertaining any dilatory motion except one motion to adjourn, and, if such resolution is adopted, the House shall immediately proceed to its execution."; and

(D) renumbering clause 3 as clause 2 and clause 4 as clause 3.

(14) In rule XLV, amend the following by—

(A) striking "On or after January 3, 1978, no" in clause 1 and inserting "No";

(B) redesignating clause 3 as clause 4; and

(C) inserting after clause 2 the following new clause:

"3. Notwithstanding any other provision of this rule, if an amount from the Official Expenses Allowance of a Member is paid into the House Recording Studio revolving fund for telecommunications satellite services, the Member may accept reimbursement from non-political entities in that amount for transmission to the Clerk of the House of Representatives for credit to the Official Expenses Allowance.".

(15) In rule XLVI, amend the following by—

(A) deleting clause 2 and by redesignating clauses 3 and 4 as clauses 2 and 3, respectively;

(B) amending clause 2 (as redesignated) to read as follows:

"2. A Member shall, before making any mass mailing, submit a sample or description of the mail matter involved to the House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards for an advisory opinion as to whether such proposed mailing is in compliance with applicable provisions of law, rule, or regulation.";

(C) adding a new clause 4 to read as follows:

"4. A Member may not send any mass mailing outside the congressional district of the Member, except that—

"(a) a Member may send mass mailings to any area in a county, if any part of the county adjoins or is inside the congressional district of the Member; and

"(b) in the case of redistricting, on and after the date referred to in section 3210(d)(1)(B) of title 39, United States Code, a Member may send mass mailings to the additional area described in that section.";

(D) striking "mailed" in clause 6 and inserting "postmarked" and inserting after the period the following: "If mail matter is of a type which is not customarily postmarked, the date on which such matter would have been postmarked if it were of a type customarily postmarked shall apply."; and

(E) amending clause 7 to read as follows:

"7. For purposes of this rule—

"(a) the term 'mass mailing' means, with respect to a session in Congress, any mailing of newsletter or other pieces of mail with substantially identical content (whether such mail is deposited singly or in bulk, or at the same time or different times), totaling more than 500 pieces in that session, except that such term does not include any mailing—

"(1) of matter in direct response to a communication from a person to whom the matter is mailed;

"(2) from a Member to other Members of Congress, or to Federal, State, or local government officials; or

"(3) of a news release to the communications media."

"(b) The term 'Member' means any Member of the House of Representatives, a Delegate to the House of Representative, or the Resident Commissioner in the House of Representatives.

"(c) The term 'Members of Congress' means Senators and Representatives in, and Delegates and Resident Commissioners to, the Congress.".

(16) In rule XLVII, amend clause 2 as follows:

(A) by striking "affilate with or be employed" in paragraph (1) and inserting "receive compensation for affiliating with or being employed";

(B) by striking "to provide professional services which involves" in paragraph (1) and inserting "which provides professional services involving";

(C) by striking "for compensation" in paragraph (1);

(D) by striking "practice" in paragraph (3) and inserting "receive compensation for practicing"; and

(E) by striking "for compensation" in paragraph (3).

(17) In rule XLVII, amended clause 3(e) as follows:

(A) by inserting after "Member," the first place it appears the following: "officer or employee,";

(B) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows: "(1) the salary of such individual as a Member, officer or employee;"

(C) by striking "Member" the first place it appears in paragraph (2) and inserting "individual" and by inserting after "Member," the second place it appears the following: "officer or employee,";

(D) by striking "Member" the first place it appears in paragraph (3) and inserting the following: "Member, officer or employee", and by striking "Member" the second place it appears and inserting "such individual"; and

(E) by striking "Member" the first place it appears in paragraph (4) and inserting the following: "Member" in the three subsequent places it appears and inserting "individual".

(18) In rule XLVIII, amended the following by—

(A) striking ", exclusive of service by any Member during the Ninety-fifth Congress" in clause 1(c);

(B) striking "the Ninety-seventh Congress and each Congress thereafter" in clause 1(c) and inserting "each Congress"; and

(C) striking "beginning after September 30, 1978" in clause 9.

(21) Add a new rule LI to read as follows:

"RULE LI.

"EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES.

"1. The provisions of the Fair Employment Practice Resolution, House Resolution 558 of the 100th Congress, are applicable to Members, officers, employees and employment positions of the House.

"2. The Committee on House Administration shall have authority to issue rules and regulations applying the rights and protections of the Fair Labor Standards Act in the House, including, but not limited to, determination of exemption categories, premitting the use of compensatory time as compensation under the maximum work week provisions of the Act, describing the record keeping requirements and providing that such record keeping provisions do not apply with respect to employees exempted pursuant to the Committee's Rules and Regulations.".

Mr. GEPHARDT (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], for the purposes of debate only, pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEPHARDT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLOMON. I ask the majority leader, and I cleared this with the minority leader, due to the vast number of speakers on this side of the aisle, and due to the importance of these rule changes, I ask unanimous consent that the debate time be extended from 1 hour to 1½ hours. We would like more than the limit of the unanimous-consent request, and we would appreciate the indulgence of the majority leader in granting that unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I object to the unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's objection is heard.

☐ 1400

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 11 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST].

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 5 contains changes to the rules of the House of Representatives recommended for inclusion in the rules of the House for the 102d Congress. For the most part, the package contains amendments to the rules of the 101st Congress which are technical, clarifying, and confronting in nature or which eliminate obsolete provisions. Two of the recommended amendments, however, substantially affect the operations of the House. Those amendments will be explained in some detail in my statement and at this time I would like to take a few minutes to briefly summarize the recommended changes to the rules of the House.

Mr. Speaker, currently, clause 9(a) of rule I grants the Speaker the authority to direct and control closed circuit telecommunications systems within the House. The first amendment simply clarifies that the Speaker is empowered to issue rules and regulations affecting any telecommunications within the House.

The second amendment provides a waiver of the service limitation restrictions for service on the Committee on the Budget for those minority Members elected to the committee as the ranking minority member. This waiver was included in rule X in the 101st Congress and was, when first adopted, only applicable to the 101st Congress. This amendment extends the waiver through the 102d Congress.

The third amendment deletes an obsolete grant of authority to the Committee on Rules found in clause 1(q) of rule X. Prior to the adoption of the 1985 Gramm-Rudman-Hollings amendments to the Congressional Budget Act, authorizing legislation was required to be reported by May 15 of the year preceding the start of the fiscal year in which such authorizing legislation becomes effective. Rule X granted the Committee on Rules the authority to waive that provision of the Budget Act in those cases in which committees did not meet the May 15 deadline. However, the 1985 amendments deleted this provision and this amendment strikes this obsolete grant of authority.

The Ethics in Government Act, enacted during the 101st Congress, granted additional authority to the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct in order that it might carry out its responsibility to issue regulations and implement certain Government ethics laws as they apply to Members, officers, and employees of the House of Representatives. The fourth amendment merely expands the jurisdictional grant of authority in the rules of the House to reflect the committee's additional responsibilities under the act.

Mr. Speaker, the fifth amendment alters clause 2(a) of rule XI to give the standing committees of the House adequate time to organize the beginning of a Congress. The current rule requires committees of the House print their rules in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD within 30 days after the Congress convenes. The amendment provides that the rules shall be printed within 30 days after the committee has been elected by the House.

The sixth amendment is a straightforward amendment which specifically provides that the ranking majority Member of each committee and subcommittee shall be designated as the vice-chairman of that committee or subcommittee.

The seventh amendment amends clause 2(l)(6) of rule XI in two respects. In the first instance, the amendment deletes duplicative and conflicting provisions contained in that clause to clarify that legislation is not eligible for consideration until after it has been available for 3 days. In the second instance, the amendment provides that the layover requirements for a budget resolution shall conform with the requirements of section 305(a)(1) of the Budget Act.

The eighth amendment is a technical change to the title of rule XII to reflect the current membership in the House of the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico and all Delegates.

The ninth amendment would allow the Speaker, in his discretion to recognize Members for a privileged motion which, if agreed to, would authorize the Speaker to declare a recess, either to a time certain or subject to the call of the Chair. Under the current rules, in order for the House to recess, it is necessary to obtain unanimous consent or the House must agree to a rule reported from the Committee on Rules providing for such a recess.

The 10th amendment is a matter of some substance. Mr. Speaker, this amendment would enhance informed and deliberate fiscal decisions by the Congress by incorporating a statutory statement of cost, provided by the Congressional Budget Office, into spending our revenue bills. Under the budget reform measures enacted at the end of the 101st Congress as part of the reconciliation package, it is imperative that Congress know the cost of legislation because, under the new pay-as-you-go procedure, a sequestration on all nonexempt entitlement programs is required to offset deficit increases caused by new entitlement and revenue legislation.

This amendment to rule XXI would require reported bills and conference reports to contain a statement of law codifying the CBO cost estimate for such bills and conference reports, through fiscal year 1995, for the purposes of pay-as-you-go sequestration. This statement of law will also ensure that the same CBO estimate is used for calculating the cost of legislation for purposes of any end-of-the-session sequestration applying to direct spending. A point of order would lie against a bill or conference report in violation of this requirement.

It is the opinion of the Democratic caucus that CBO cost estimates most accurately reflect the will of Congress and ensures that the scoring of these measures will be performed by an agency without any policy interests in the legislation which it is evaluating. The rule also ensures that Members will know when they vote on entitlement and revenue legislation whether enactment of such legislation may result in a sequester of all nonexempt direct spending programs, including Medicare.

In order to facilitate the business of the House, the 11th amendment would permit the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to cluster votes in those instances in which a series of votes may take place in the Committee. In other words, the Chair would be permitted, in his discretion, to reduce the time on all votes subsequent to a 15-minute vote to 5 minutes so long as no other business intervenes between votes.

The 12th amendment is a technical amendment which clarifies that the alphabetical call of the committees under Calendar Wednesday shall begin anew with each session of a Congress as well as at the beginning of a Congress.

The 13th amendment amends rule XXVII in two respects. In the first instance, the amendments strikes the provisions in current House rules which requires a vote on ordering seconds on motions to suspend the rules. In the second instance, the amendment amends the discharge rule to clarify that resolutions discharged from the Committee on Rules are to be considered in the House in a manner similar to the consideration of bills discharged from other committees of the House.

Mr. Speaker, at the present time, all expenses associated with the use of the House Recording Studio and the electronic transmission of recording sessions are charged against the official expenses allowance of a Member. However, in some instances, the transmission costs are more properly attributed to the nonpolitical organization receiving the transmission. The 14th amendment would allow a Member, in those instances, to receive reimbursement and to restore his expense allowance in the exact amount of the transmission cost charged against the official expense allowance. Absent this amendment to rule XLV, it is possible that the receipt by a Member for reimbursement for expenses associated with an official communication is susceptible to characterization of the gift rule.

The 15th amendment conforms the limitations on the use of the frank in the current House rules with the additional restrictions on franking and mass mailings included in the legislative branch appropriations for fiscal years 1990 and 1991. The amendment strikes the annual limitation in the House Rule on postal patron mailings, requires that any mass mailing be submitted for prior approval to the Franking Commission, provides restrictions on mass mailings outside a Member's congressional district, requires that mass mailings must be postmarked no later than 60 days prior to an election, and adds the new statutory definition of mass mailing to the rule.

The 16th and 17th amendments in House Resolution 5 are technical and clarifying amendments which bring the Rules of the House into conformity with the Ethics Reform Act of 1989, as amended. Amendment No. 16 makes several grammatical changes to clarify that the ban on affiliation with a firm applies only if compensation is received and only to affiliation or employment with a professional services firm. Amendment No. 17 conforms the definition of the applicability of outside earned income in the Rules of the House to include appropriate references to officers and employees of the House.

Amendment No. 18 strikes several obsolete transition provisions in the House Rules relating to unofficial office accounts and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

The final amendment contained in House Resolution 5, Mr. Speaker, relates to a matter of great importance to the operation of the House of Representatives. Amendment No. 19 creates a new House rule LI which codifies the provisions of the Fair Employment Practices resolution first passed by the House in the 100th Congress and also authorizes the Committee on House Administration to issue rules and regulations to clarify and reconcile the application of the rights and protections of the Fair Labor Standards Act with other House policies and disbursing practices.

Paragraph 1 of the amendment, which makes permanent the Fair Employment Practices resolution, prohibits discrimination in employment actions and provides that the Office of Fair Employment Practices can adjudicate any complaints brought under the rule.

Paragraph 2 of the new rule grants the Committee on House Administration the authority to issue rules and regulations relating to the application of the minimum wage law in the House of Representatives. The rule specifically provides the committee with the authority to issue rules and regulations which would classify House employees as exempt and nonexempt for purposes of the Fair Labor Standards Act; to provide a means for compensatory time off in lieu of cash payments for work in excess of 40 hours a week for nonexempt employees; and to issue rules which will eliminate unnecessary recordkeeping for exempt employees.

Mr. Speaker, that concludes my explanation of the recommended amendments to the Rules of the House for the 102d Congress embodied in House Resolution 5.

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the gentleman for yielding the time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished historian George Galloway, in his "History of the U.S. House of Representatives," tells us, and I quote:

> The customary practice in post bellum days, when a new House met, was to proceed under general parliamentary law, often for several days, with unlimited debate, until a satisfactory revision of former rules had been effected.

Mr. Speaker, in recent times, this practice of open debate and amendment of the proposed set of House rules has been abandoned in favor of this abbreviated, 1-hour of debate with virtually no opportunity for amendment from either side of the aisle.

That tells us a lot, Mr. Speaker, of what has been happening to this House. The important rules of procedure which will guide our committees and subcommittees and this House in their crucial legislative deliberations over the next 2 years have been really relegated to a pro forma exercise.

But today, there is no longer an opportunity for Members to fully participate in offering amendments to reform this House as it should be reformed. If ever there has been a time when we should undergo a thorough debate and revision of our rules, this is it, now, today.

Victorious candidates usually come away from elections claiming a mandate. Well, if there is one mandate the American people handed us last November 6, it was this: "Clean up your act, Congress, clean up your act. House of Representatives: no more business as usual."

Some of my friends on the other side of the aisle like to crow that the President's approval rating has slipped to 52 percent, even though that is greater that at any time since John F. Kennedy was President. But do not crow too loudly, my colleagues. The approval rating of this Congress has fallen to a measley 23 percent, according to an ABC News election day survey. Remember that? Let me repeat: Only 23 percent of the American people approve of the way this Congress conducts its business. Is that anything to be proud of? I should hope not.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, just look at what the Democrat caucus serves up on opening day in the way of House rules changes. Take a hard look at your Democrat caucus resolution of House rule changes. Instead of toughening up the budget enforcement, they are already going back on last year's budget summit agreements.

Pay-as-you-go enforcement provisions, remember that? Remember all the talk about that on that side of the aisle? By substituting the Congressional Budget Office cost estimates in bills for session-end Office of Management and budget scorekeeping, you are opening the way for all kinds of games and abuses. The American people do not want that. Instead of the highly touted system of pay-as-you-go, you have turned this whole budget process back to play-as-you-go, or something else, the same old system that got us into the irresponsible fiscal mess we are in today. And to the American people, that is called pay-through-the-nose, and they are sick of it, gentlemen. The truth is, the Democrat caucus broke faith with the American people before the ink was even dry on the so-called deficit reduction budget agreement. You ought to listen to this upstairs in the Press Gallery: A plan that cemented into law a $165 billion tax increase on the American people conveniently left the door open for the Democrat caucus to weasel out of any meaningful spending cuts.

Mr. Speaker, I am embarrassed. I am embarrassed for your Democratic Party. I am embarrassed for the American people.

What other goodies have you Democrats slipped into this package? Well, for one you want to give the House Administration Committee authority to completely exempt the House, listen to this, from the Fair Labor Standards Act. How is that for fairness to American workers?

And speaking of fairness and openness, your Democratic rules would also make it possible for Members to reimburse their official accounts from undisclosed sources for TV satellite transmission. And you have changed the discharge rule so that you can completely alter the procedures for considering discharged bills and thereby thwart the original intent of the signers of the discharge petition.

Score another one for Democrat fairness.

Mr. Speaker, what we Republicans are proposing as an alternative to your House deform package is a 36-point program for genuine and thorough House reform. We call our package a Republican reform manifesto for a new House revolution.

First of all, and listen to this, tell me if you disagree with any of this: We would mandate reporting of a campaign reform bill, forcing a vote on this issue that the House has ignored for too many years. We would strengthen our committee system by requiring the realignment of committee jurisdictions along more functional and rational lines, reducing the number of subcommittees—we have way too many—abolishing proxy voting and one-third quorums, which lead to all kinds of abuses. We would require committees to adopt and implement oversight agendas and we would abolish the joint bill referrals that are tying this House in knots.

We would also bring about real budget reform, including, and listen to this, rescission authority for the President of the United States over unauthorized appropriations, making it harder to waive the Budget Act, something you did, you Democrats, 56 percent of the time last year on bills brought before this House. You waived the Budget Act and you waived Gramm-Rudman.

In addition, we would place strict limits on the use of omnibus continuing resolutions. We prohibit extraneous matters in reconciliation bills, something else that gets us in trouble all the time, and we mandate a study and recommendations on a biennial budget appropriations process.

Is this not what you want as well as us?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, our reform package gets at some of the gross procedural abuses which have been inflicted on members of both parties in recent years.

Today's gag rule is but a taste of what we are in for in the coming year. In the last Congress, 55 percent of all bills brought under rules were considered under a restrictive amendment process, 55 percent; compared to 14 years ago when it was only 15 percent. The press ought to take notice of that. Mr. Speaker, that is an insult to Members on both sides of this aisle. But more tragically, by prohibiting Members on both sides of the aisle from offering amendments you are disenfranchising the millions of Americans that we represent.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the American people want and they expect better of us. Your package of rules gives them worse; our package would give them a House that works, for each of you and each of the American people that we represent.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, as I mentioned at the outset, it is outrageously arrogant to bring a resolution containing sweeping rules changes to this floor and be limited to only 1 hour of debate, particularly when the new rules completely unravel the Deficit Reduction Act that took months and months and months to accomplish.

But the time has come for you to be counted. Will this House vote yes to change the rules, thereby reaffirming the $165 billion tax increase on the American people last year? But at the same time, today, you are removing the one major enforcement procedure that controls spending in the Deficit Reduction Act. Or will you vote "no" with us to higher taxes? "No" to more taxes that are not tied to spending reductions and controls? That is what we are voting on here today. To all of you Democrats who were gagged and disenfranchised by closed rules, to all of you Democrats who were forced time and again to waive the Budget Act, thereby causing this disastrous fiscal mess we are in today, I say to you, gagged and disenfranchised Democrats, now is your chance to stand up and be counted, to show what you are made of, to have the guts to say on the floor of this House what your constituents are saying back home, "Enough is enough is enough. The American people want those deficits stopped. We want them stopped today, now."

Members of this House, with just a little spunk, with just a little backbone, we can do what is right for America by voting down the previous question. I urge a "no" vote and reserve the balance of my time.

H. RES. 5

(Providing for the Adoption of the Rules of the House)

An amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. MICHEL of Illinois.

Strike all after the resolving clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Rules of the House of Representatives of the One Hundred First Congress, including all applicable provisions of law and concurrent resolutions adopted pursuant thereto which constituted the rules of the House at the end of the One Hundred First Congress, be, and they are hereby, adopted as the Rules of the House of Representatives of the One Hundred Second Congress, with the following amendments included as part thereof:

"CAMPAIGN REFORM"

"(1)(a) The Committee on House Administration is directed to report to the House no later than June 30, 1991, legislation to reform Federal election law and campaign practices.

"(b) Not later than July 31, 1991, all other committees to which such bill may have been referred shall report such bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any committee which has not reported as directed by such date shall be deemed to be discharged from the further consideration of such bill.

"(c) Not later than ten legislative days after the July 31, 1991, reporting deadline, the Committee on Rules shall report a resolution providing for the consideration of such campaign reform bill under an open amendment process. If such a resolution is not reported by such date, it shall be in order on any day thereafter for any Member to move that the House resolve into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, said bill shall be debatable for not to exceed four hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on House Administration, and shall then be considered for amendment under the five-mninute rule.".

"REALIGNMENT OF COMMITTEE JURISDICTIONS

"(2) The Committee on Rules is directed to conduct a thorough and complete study with respect to the operation of House Rule X, 'Establishment and Jurisdiction of Standing Committees,' with a view to realigning the jurisdictions of House committees along more functional and rational lines in order to eliminate the duplication, overlap, and inefficiencies associated with the present committee system. The Committee shall report its findings and recommendations for change to the House no later than December 31, 1991.".

"VETO MESSAGES

"(3) In rule I, clause 5 is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"(c) He shall, immediately after the reading of a veto message from the President, and without intervening motion or business, state the question on reconsideration of the vetoed measure, and no motion shall have precedence over a demand for the previous question on such question except one motion to postpone the vote on reconsideration to a date certain which shall not be later than the tenth legislative day thereafter.".

"BROADCAST COVERAGE

"(4) In rule I, clause 9(b)(1) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: 'He shall provide for the visual coverage of the proceedings of the House on a uniform basis throughout each day's session, and any such coverage may include periodic views of the entire Chamber provided that it is uniform throughout the day and does not detract from the visual coverage of any person who is speaking.'".

"HOUSE SCHEDULING REFORM

"(5) In rule I, add the following new clause:

"11. (a) At the beginning of each session of the Congress the Speaker shall, after consultation with the minority leader and the chairmen of the committees of the House, announce a legislative program for the session which shall include: (1) target dates for the consideration of specified major budgetary, authorization and appropriations bills; (2) an indication of those weeks during which the House will be in session (which, unless otherwise indicated, shall be assumed to be full, five-day work weeks for the conduct of committee and House floor business); (3) those weeks set aside for district work periods (which shall be scheduled at periodic intervals), holidays, and other recesses; and (4) the target date for the adjournment of that session.

"(b) The Speaker shall ensure that the minority leader is fully consulted in developing the legislative program for the House each week.".

"OVERSIGHT REFORM

"(6)(a) In rule X, clause 2 is amended by adding the following new paragraphs:

"(b)(1) Not later than March 1 in the first session of a Congress each standing committee of the House shall, in a meeting which is open to the public and with a quorum present, adopt and submit to the Committee on House Administration its oversight plans for that Congress. In developing such plans each committee shall, to the maximum extent feasible—

"(A) consult with other committees of the House which have jurisdiction over the same or related laws, programs, or agencies within its jurisdiction with the objective of assuring that such laws, programs, or agencies are reviewed in the same Congress and that there is maximum coordination between such committees in the conduct of such reviews; and such plans shall include an explanation of what steps have been and will be taken to assure such coordination and cooperation;

"(B) give priority consideration to including in its plans the review of those laws, programs, or agencies operating under permanent budget authority or permanent statutory authority; and

"(C) have a view toward insuring that all significant laws, programs, or agencies within its jurisdiction are subject to review at least once every ten years.

"(2) It shall not be in order to consider any committee expense resolution, or any amendment thereto, pursuant to clause 5 of Rule XI for any committee which has not submitted its oversight plans as required by this paragraph.

"(3) Not later than March 15 in the first session of a Congress, after consultation with the Speaker, the majority leader, and the minority leader, the Committee on House Administration shall report to the House the oversight plans submitted by each committee together with any recommendations which it, or the House leadership group referred to above, may make to assure the most effective coordination of such plans and otherwise achieve the objectives of this clause.

"(e) The Speaker, with the approval of the House, may appoint special ad hoc oversight committees for the purpose of reviewing specific matters within the jurisdiction of two or more standing committees.".

"(b) In rule XI, clause 1(d) is amended to read as follows:

"(d)(1) Each committee shall submit to the House not later than January 2 of each odd-numbered year, a report on the activities of that committee under this rule and Rule X during the Congress ending on January 3 of such year.

"(2) Such report shall include separate sections summarizing the legislative and oversight activities of that committee during that Congress.

"(3) The oversight section of such report shall include a summary of the oversight plans submitted by the committee pursuant to clause 2(c) of Rule X, a summary of the actions taken and recommendations made with respect to each such plan, and a summary of any additional oversight activities undertaken by that committee, and any recommendations made or actions taken thereon.".

"MULTIPLE REFERRAL OF LEGISLATION

"(7) In rule X, clause 5(c) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) In carrying out paragraphs (a) and (b) with respect to any matter, the Speaker shall initially refer the matter to one committee which he shall designate as the committee of principal jurisdiction; but, he may also refer the matter to one or more additional committees, for consideration in sequence (subject to appropriate time limitations), either on its initial referral or after the matter has been reported by the committee of principal jurisdiction; or refer portions of the matter to one or more additional committees (reflecting different subjects and jurisdictions) for the exclusive consideration of such portion or portions; or refer the matter to a special ad hoc committee appointed by the Speaker, with the approval of the House, from the members of the committees having legislative jurisdiction, for the specific purpose of considering that matter and reporting to the House thereon; or make such other privisions as may be considered appropriate.".

"COMMITTEE ELECTIONS AND ORGANIZATION

"(8) In rule X, clause 6(a)(1), the first sentence is amended to read as follows: "The standing committees specified in clause 1 shall be elected by the House within seven legislative days after the commencement of each Congress, from nominations submitted by the respective party caucuses, and said committees shall hold their organizational meetings not later than three legislative days after their election.".

"COMMITTEE RATIOS

"(9)(a) In rule X, clause 6(a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(3) The membership of each committee (and each subcommittee, task force, or other subunit thereof), shall reflect the ratio of majority to minority party Members of the House at the beginning of the Congress. This subparagraph shall not apply to the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct which shall be constituted as provided for in subparagraph (2). For the purposes of this clause, the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico and the Delegates to the House shall not be counted in determining the party ratio of the House.".

"(b) In rule X, clause 6(f) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following: "The membership of each such select committee (and of any subcommittee, task force or subunit thereof), and of each such conference committee, shall reflect the ratio of the majority to minority party Members of the House at the time of its appointment.".

"SUBCOMMITTEE LIMITS

"(10) In rule X, clause 6(d) is amended to read as follows:

"(d)(1) Each standing committee of the House (except the Committee on the Budget) that has more than twenty members, shall establish at least four subcommittees; but, in no event shall any standing committee (except the Committee on Appropriations) establish more than six subcommittees.

"(2) No Member may serve at any one time as a member of more than four subcommittees of committees of the House.

"(3) For the purposes of this paragraph, the term 'subcommittee' includes any panel, task force, special subcommittee, or any subunit of a standing committee, or any select committee, which is established for a period of longer than six months in any Congress.".

"PROXY VOTING BAN

"(11) In rule XI, clause 2(f) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) No vote by any member of any committee or subcommittee with respect to any measure or matter may be cast by proxy.".

"OPEN MEETINGS

"(12) In rule XI, clause 2(g)(1) is amended by striking the colon in the first sentence and all that follows in paragraph one and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "because disclosure of matters to be considered would endanger national security, would tend to defame, degrade or incriminate any person or otherwise would violate any law or rule of the House, or involves committee personnel matters.".

"MAJORITY QUORUMS

"(13) In rule XI, clause 2(h)(2) is amended to read as follow:

"(2) A majority of the members of each committee or subcommittee shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of any business, including the markup of legislation.".

"REPORT ACCOUNTABILITY

"(14) In rule XI, clause 2(l)(2)(B) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) With respect to each rollcall vote on a motion to report any bill or resolution of a public character, the total number of votes cast for and against reporting, and the names of those members voting for and against, shall be included in the committee report on the measure.". "In Rule XI, clause 2(l)(2) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(C) With respect to each nonrecord vote on a motion to report any bill or resolution of a public character, the names of those members of the committee actually present at the time bill or resolution is ordered reported shall be included in the committee report.".

"COMMITTEE DOCUMENTS

"(15) In rule XI, clause 2(l) is amended by inserting after subparagraph (5) the following new subparagraph, and by redesignating existing subparagraphs accordingly:

"(6)(A) Any committee or subcommittee print, document, or other material, other than reports subject to the preceding provisions of this clause, prepared for public distribution, shall either be approved by the committee or subcommittee prior to such public distribution, and opportunity shall be afforded for the inclusion of supplemental, minority, or additional views in accordance with the provisions of subparagraph (5), of such print, document, or other material shall contain on its cover the following disclaimer in bold face type:

'This material has not been officially approved by the committee [or subcommittee, as the case may be] on [name of committee or subcommittee] and may not therefore necessarily reflect the views of its members.'

and any such print, document, or other material not approved by the committee or subcommittee may not include the names of its members, other than the name of the committee or subcommittee chairman releasing the document, but shall be made available to all of the members of the committee not less than three calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays and public holidays) prior to its being made public.

"(B) The provisions of this subparagraph do not apply to prints of bills or resolutions, summaries thereof, or prints containing the names of committee or subcommittee members, staff, or other factual information regarding the committee or its subcommittees, their jurisdictions or rules, or any matters pending before such committee or its subcommittees, provided that such documents do not also contain opinions, views, findings or recommendations.

"(C) Nothing in this subparagraph shall be construed to authorize any subcommittee or chairman thereof to issue any print, document or other material not otherwise authorized by the rules of the committee.".

"OFFICIAL FOREIGN TRAVEL REPORTING

"(16) In rule XI, clause 2(n)(1)(B) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: 'All such individual reports shall also include a summary of all official meetings, interviews, inspection tours or other functions in which the individual participated, by country and date.'".

"SAME DAY CONSIDERATION OF RULES COMMITTEE REPORTS

"(17) In rule XI, the first sentence of clause 4(b) is amended by substituting the following for the matter in parentheses: '(except that it shall not be called up for consideration on the same calendar day, nor on the subsequent calendar day of the same legislative day, that it is presented to the House, unless so determined by a vote of not less than two-thirds of the members voting, but this provision shall not apply during the last three days of the session)' ".

"PERMITTING INSTRUCTIONS IN MOTIONS TO RECOMMIT

"(18) In rule XI, the second sentence in clause 4(b) is amended by substituting the following for the final clause: 'nor shall it report any rule or order which would prevent the motion to recommit from being made as provided in clause 4 of Rule XVI, including a motion with amendatory instructions (except in the case of a Senate measure for which the language of a House-passed measure has been substituted).' ".

"RESTRICTIVE RULE LIMITATION

"(19) In rule XI, clause 4 is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"(e) It shall not be in order to consider any resolution reported from the Committee on Rules providing for the consideration of any bill or resolution otherwise subject to amendment under House rules if that resolution limits the right of Members to offer germane amendments to such bill or resolution unless the chairman of the Committee on Rules has orally announced in the House, at least four legislative days prior to the scheduled consideration of such matter by the Committee on Rules, that less than an open amendment process might be recommended by the Committee for the consideration of such bill or resolution.".

"LIMITATION ON SELF-EXECUTING RULES

"(20) In rule XI, clause 4 is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"(f) It shall not be in order to consider any order of business resolution reported from the Committee on Rules which provides that, upon the adoption of such resolution, the House shall be considered to have automatically adopted a motion, amendment, or resolution, or to have passed a bill, joint resolution, or conference report thereon, unless the consideration of such order of business resolution is agreed to by not less than two-thirds of the members voting, and the yeas and nays shall be considered as ordered when the Speaker puts the question on consideration.".

"BUDGET WAIVER LIMITATION

"(21) In rule XI, clause 4 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(g)(1) It shall not be in order to consider any resolution reported from the Committee on Rules for the consideration of any measure which waives any specified provisions of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended, unless the report accompanying such resolution includes an explanation of, and justification for, any such waiver, an estimated cost of the provisions to which the waiver applies, and a summary or text of any written comments on the waiver received by the committee from the Committee on the Budget.

"(2) It shall be in order after the previous question has been ordered on any such resolution, to offer motions proposing to strike one or more such waivers from the resolution, and each such motion shall be decided without debate and shall require for adoption the requisite number of affirmative votes as required by the Budget Act or the rules of the House. After disposition of any and all such motions, the House shall proceed to an immediate vote on adoption of the resolutions.

"(3) It shall not be in order to consider a resolution which waives all House rules except by a vote of two-thirds of those Members voting.".

"COMMITTEE STAFFING

"(22) In rule XI, clause 5 is amended by inserting the following new paragraph (a), and by redesignating existing paragraphs accordingly:

"(a)(1) It shall not be in order to consider any primary expense resolution until the Committee on House Administration has reported, and the House has adopted, a resolution establishing an overall ceiling for House committee staff personnel for that year, and any such resolution shall be privileged.

"(2) In developing any primary expense resolution, the Committee on House Administration shall specify in the resolution the number of staff positions authorized by the resolution. The committee shall verify in the report accompanying any such primary expense resolution that the number of staff positions authorized by such resolution is in conformity with the overall ceiling on such positions established by the House.

"(3) In no event shall the total number of additional staff positions authorized by all such primary expense resolutions, taken together with the number of staff positions authorized by clause 6 of this rule (providing for professional and clerical staff), exceed the ceiling established by the House for that year.

"(4) In allocating staff positions pursuant to the overall ceiling established by the House, the committee shall take into account the past and anticipated legislative and oversight activities of each committee.

"(5) In any supplemental expense resolution, and in any amendment thereto, the committee shall specify the number of additional staff positions, if any, authorized by such resolution, and shall indicate in the report accompanying any such resolution whether the additional staff positions are in conformity with or exceed the overall ceiling established by the House.

"(6) It shall not be in order to consider any supplemental expense resolution, or any amendment thereto, authorizing additional staff positions in excess of the overall ceiling established by the House except by a vote of two-thirds of the Members voting, a quorum being present.

"(7) It shall not be in order to consider any primary or supplemental expense resolution for one or more committees unless the report on such resolution includes a statement verifying that each such committee has adopted and compiled with a committee rule entitling the minority party on such committee, upon the request of a majority of such minority, to not less than one-third of the funds provided for committee staff pursuant to each primary or supplemental expense resolution.

"(8) For the purposes of the One Hundred Second Congress, the overall ceiling for committee staff in a resolution reported by the committee pursuant to subparagraph (1), or contained in any amendment thereto, shall not exceed 90 percentum of the total committee staff personnel employed at the end of the One Hundred First Congress.".

"COMMEMORATIVE CALENDAR

"(23) In rule XIII, insert the following new clause 6 and redesignate succeeding clauses accordingly:

"6. There shall also be a Commemorative Calendar to be comprised of unreported bills and resolutions respecting commemorative holidays and celebrations referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and requested by the chairman and ranking minority member of such committee, in writing, to be placed thereon. On the first and third Tuesdays of each month, after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only and resolutions called on the Private Calendar, the Speaker shall direct the Clerk to call the bills and resolutions on the Commemorative Calendar. Should objection be made by two or more Members to the consideration of any bill or resolution so called, it shall be removed from such Calendar. Such bills and resolutions, if considered, shall be considered in the House.".

"AUTOMATIC ROLL CALL VOTES

"(24) In rule XV, add the following new clause:

"(7). The yeas and nays shall be considered as ordered when the Speaker puts the question upon final passage of any bill, joint resolution, or conference report thereon, making general appropriations, providing revenue, or adjusting the statutory rate of pay of Members of Congress, or on final adoption of any concurrent resolution on the budget or conference report thereon which provides an increase in the statutory debt limit.".

"APPROPRIATION REFORMS

"(25)(a) In Rule XXI, clause 2 is amended by striking the second sentence of paragraph (c) and paragraph (d) in its entirety, and by inserting the following new paragraph (d):

"(d)(1) For the purposes of House Rules, a 'general appropriation bill' shall include any bill or joint resolution making continuing appropriations in a fiscal year for a period in excess of thirty days, and any such measure shall include the full text of the language proposed to be enacted (as opposed to mere references to measures, or amendments thereto, which have been reported or passed by either House, or agreed to by a committee of conference).

"(2) The provision of clause 2(1)(3)(B) of Rule XI shall apply to any 'general appropriation bill' as defined in subparagraphs (1).

"(3) For the purpose of this clause, all points of order shall be considered as having been reserved against any general appropriation bill at the time it was reported.".

"(b) In Rule XXI, clause 2 is amended by inserting the after subparagraph (d) the following new paragraph:

"(e) It shall not be in order to consider any bill or joint resolution making continuing appropriations for a period of thirty days or less unless such measure only provides appropriations in the lesser amount and under the more restrictive authority of each pertinent appropriation measure: as passed by the House; as passed by the Senate; as agreed to by a committee of conference; or enacted for the preceding fiscal year.".

"(c) In rule XXI, clause 3 is amended by striking the period at the end thereof, inserting in lieu thereof a comma, and adding the following: "and shall contain a list of all appropriations contained in the bill for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.".

"(d) In rule XI, clause 2(1)(3)(B) is amended by striking "(other than continuing appropriations)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(other than continuing appropriations, except as provided by clause 2(d) of Rule XXI)".

"(e) In rule XI, clause 4 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(h) It shall not be in order, except by a vote of not less than three-fifths of the Members of the House duly chosen and sworn, to consider any rule or order from the Committee on Rules which waives the provisions of clause 2(e) of Rule XXI against the consideration of any short-term, continuing appropriations measures as defined therein; or which waives the provisions of clause 2 of Rule XXI against, or denies amendment to, any provision in a long-term, continuing appropriation measure as defined therein if said provision has not been previously considered and agreed to by the House.".

"RECONCILIATION LIMITATION

"(26) In rule XXI, add the following new clause:

"8.(a) No provision shall be reported in the House in any reconciliation bill pursuant to the most recent agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget, or be in order as an amendment thereto in the House or Committee of the Whole, which is not related to achieving the purposes of the directives to House committees contained in such concurrent resolution.

"(b) Nothing in this clause shall be construed to prevent the consideration of any provision in a reconciliation bill, or any amendment thereto, which achieves savings greater than those directed of a committee and which conforms to paragraph (c) of this clause, or to prevent the consideration of motions to strike made in order by the Committee on Rules to achieve the purposes of the directives.

"(c) For the purposes of this clause, a provision shall be considered related to achieving the purposes of directives contained in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget if it is estimated by the House Committee on the Budget, in consultation with the Congressional Budget Office, to effectuate or implement a reduction in budget authority or in new spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C) of the Congressional Budget Act, or to raise revenues, or both, and, in the case of an amendment, if it is within (in whole or in part) the jurisdiction of any committee instructed in the concurrent resolution.

"(d) The point of order provided for by this clause shall not apply to Senate amendments or to conference reports.

"(e) For the purposes of this clause, all points of order shall be considered as having been reserved against a reconciliation bill at the time it was reported.".

"AUTHORIZATION REPORTING DEADLINE"

"(27) Rule XXI is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"9. It shall not be in order to consider in the House any bill or joint resolution which directly or indirectly authorizes the enactment of new budget authority for a fiscal year unless that bill or joint resolution is reported in the House on or before May 15 preceding the beginning of such fiscal year.".

"PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE"

"(28) In rule XXIV, clause 1 is amended by inserting after the second order of business the following new order of business, and by redesignating succeeding orders accordingly: "third. The Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag.".

"SUSPENSION OF THE RULES"

"(29) In rule XXVII, clause 1 is amended by inserting after "1." the designation "(a)", and by inserting after paragraph (a) the following new paragraphs:

"(b) It shall not be in order to entertain a motion to suspend the rules and pass or agree to any measure or matter unless by direction of the committee or committees of jurisdiction over the measure or matter, or unless a written request is filed with the Speaker by the chairman and ranking minority member of the committee or committees having jurisdiction over the measure or matter, asking for its consideration under suspension of the rules.

"(c) A motion to suspend the rules and pass or agree to any measure or matter shall not be in order if the measure or matter would enact or authorize the enactment of new budget authority or new spending authority in excess of $50,000,000 for any fiscal year; nor shall it be in order to entertain a motion to suspend the rules to pass any joint resolution which proposes to amend the Constitution.

"(d) It shall not be in order to entertain a motion to suspend the rules and pass or agree to any measure or matter unless written notice is placed in the Congressional Record of its scheduled consideration at least one calendar day prior to its consideration, and such notification shall include the numerical designation of the measure or matter, its short title, and the text of any amendments to be offered thereto, and the date on which the measure or matter is scheduled to be considered.".

"DISCHARGE MOTIONS"

"(30) In rule XXVII, clause 4 is amended by inserting after the fourth sentence the following new sentence: "When one-hundred Members have signed the motion, the Clerk shall cause to be printed in the Congressional Record the name of each Member who has signed or withdrawn a signature to the motion, and shall thereafter publish an updated list in the Congressional Record at the end of each succeeding week the House is in session.".

"INCLUSION OF VIEWS WITH CONFERENCE REPORTS"

"(31) In rule XXVIII, clause 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(e) If, on the day a report of any committee of conference has received the requisite number of signatures for approval by House conferees, any House conferee gives notice of intention to file supplemental, minority, or additional views, that member shall be entitled to not less than three calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays) in which to file such views with the principal manager on the part of the House, such views shall be in writing and signed by that member. All such views so filed by one or more members of the committee shall be published in the same volume as the report of the committee of conference and the joint explanatory statement filed in the House, and the volume shall bear on its cover a recital that any such supplemental, minority, or additional views are included as part of that volume. This paragraph shall not preclude the immediate filing or printing of a conference report if a timely request to file such views was not made as provided by this paragraph.".

"INTELLIGENCE COMMITTEE OATH"

"(32)(a) In rule XLVIII, clause 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(d) At the time a Member is appointed to serve on the select committee, or within thirty days after the adoption by the House of this provision, whichever is later, the Member shall take the following oath:

'I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will not directly or indirectly disclose to any unauthorized person any classified information received in the course of my duties on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, except with the formal approval of the committee or of the House.'

The oath shall be administered by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The Clerk of the House of Representatives of the One Hundred Second Congress and each succeeding Congress shall cause this oath to be printed, furnishing two copies to each Member appointed to the select committee who has taken this oath, which shall be subscribed to by the Member who shall deliver them to the Clerk, one to be filed in the records of the House of Representatives, and the other to be recorded in the Journal of the House and the Congressional Record.".

"(b) In rule XLVIII, at the end of clause 5, add the following new sentences: "Each employee of the select committee and any person engaged by contract or otherwise to perform services for or at the request of the select committee who is required to subscribe to the agreement in writing referred to in the first sentence of this clause shall, at the time of the signing or within thirty days after the adoption of this provision, whichever is later, also take the oath set out in clause 1(d) of this rule. The oath shall be administered by the chairman or by any member of the committee or of the committee staff designated by the chairman. The Clerk of the House of Representatives of the One Hundred Second Congress and each succeeding Congress shall cause this oath to be printed, furnishing two copies to each such person taking this oath, which shall be subscribed to by such person, who shall deliver them to the Clerk, one to be filed in the records of the House of Representatives, and the other to be recorded in the Journal of the House and in the Congressional Record.".

"(c) In rule XLVIII, clause 7(d), insert immediately after the words "paragraph (c)" the words "or the oath required by clause 1(d) of by clause 5," and by adding immediately after the last sentence of clause 7(d) the following new sentences: "The select committee may refer cases of unauthorized disclosure and violations of the required oaths to the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct for investigation. While a member of the committee is the subject of such a pending investigation, the select committee may determine by majority vote that the member shall not be given access to classified information.".

"ACCURACY OF THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD"

"(33) At the end of the Rules of the House, add the following new rule:

"RULE LI."

"THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD."

"1. The Congressional Record shall be a substantially verbatim account of remarks made during the proceedings of the House, subject only to technical, grammatical and typographical corrections authorized by the Member making the remarks involved.

"2. Unparliamentary remarks may be deleted only by unanimous consent or by order of the House.

"3. The provisions of clause 4(e)(1) of rule X shall apply to violations of this rule.".

"ENHANCED RESCISSION AUTHORITY"

"(34)(a) The Committee on Rules and the Committee on Government Operations shall, not later than May 31, 1991, report legislation granting the President enhanced rescission authority with respect to any budget authority not authorized by law. Such legislation shall provide that any such budget authority shall be considered to be permanently canceled unless a joint resolution disapproving such rescission is enacted within 45-calendar days of continuous session of Congress (as defined by section 1011 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974) after the date on which the President's special rescission messsage is received.

"(b) If such legislation is not reported by the committees named above by the date specified, the committees not reporting shall be considered as having been discharged from the further consideration of the first such bill introduced and it shall be in order on any day after June 3, 1991, for any Member of the House (after consultation with the Speaker as to the most appropriate time for consideration), as a matter of highest privilege, to move to resolve into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for its consideration, and the bill shall be subject to two hours of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the majority and minority leaders, or their designees, followed by consideration of the measure for amendment under the five-minute rule.".

"BIENNIAL BUDGET-APPROPRIATIONS PROCESS"

"(35) The Committee on Rules is directed to conduct a complete a through study of the advisability and feasibility of converting to a biennial budget and appropriations process and corresponding multi-year authorizations, and to report its findings and recommendations to the House not later than December 31, 1991.".

"APPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN LAWS TO THE HOUSE"

"(36)(a) It is the policy of the House that the laws of the United States set forth in subparagraph (b) should be amended to apply to the House of Representatives in the same or similar manner as such laws apply to the Executive Branch.

"(b) Not later than June 30, 1991, the standing committees of the House with subject matter jurisdiction over the following laws of the United States shall report to the House legislation to implement subparagraph (a):

"(1) The National Labor Relations Act;

"(2) The Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970;

"(3) The Equal Pay Act of 1963;

"(4) The Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967;

"(5) Section 552 of title 5, United States Code (popularly known as the Freedom of Information Act);

"(6) Section 552a of title 5, United States Code (popularly known as the Privacy Act of 1974);

"(7) Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (relating to equal employment opportunity);

"(8) Chapter 39 of title 28, United States Code (relating to an independent counsel).

"(c) The Committee on Rules shall, not later than ten legislative days after any such legislation has been reported, report a resolution providing for the consideration of such measure in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union under an open amendment process.

"(d) If such legislation is not reported by all the committees named above by the date specified, the first bill introduced which implements the policy referred to in subparagraph (a) and which encompasses all the laws referred to in subparagraph (a) and which encompasses all the laws referred to in subparagraph (b) shall be considered as having been discharged from all the committees to which it was referred. It shall be in order on any day after July 15, 1991, for any Member of the House (after consultation with the Speaker as to the most appropriate time for consideration), as a matter of highest privilege, to move to resolve into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for its consideration, and the bill shall be subject to four hours of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the majority and minority leaders, or their designees, followed by consideration of the measure for amendment under the five-minute rule.".

A REPUBLICAN REFORM MANIFESTO FOR NEW HOUSE REVOLUTION: HIGHLIGHTS OF RECOMMENDATIONS

(Republican House Rules Substitute, 102d Congress)

Campaign Reform: The House Administration Committee would be directed to report a campaign reform bill no later than June 30, 1991, other committees no later than July 31st, and the Rules Committee would be required to report an open rule on the package not later than three legislative days after the latter deadline. If a rule is not reported, the package would be privileged for consideration on any day thereafter.

Committee Reforms:

The Rules Committee would be required to report recommendations no later than Dec. 31, 1991, to realign House committee jurisdictions along more rational and functional lines.

The joint referral of bills to more than one committee would be abolished (while retaining sequential and split referrals).

Committees (other than Appropriations) would be limited to no more than six subcommittees, and Members to no more than four subcommittee assignments.

Proxy voting and one-third quorums would be abolished;

Party ratios on committees must reflect the party ratio of the House.

Committee staff ceilings would be established and committee staff would be reduced by 10% from previous Congress.

Committees would be required to adopt oversight agendas at the beginning of a Congress and report on implementation of the agenda at the end of each Congress.

Roll call votes on reporting bills would be required in committee reports.

Foreign travel reports by Members and staff must include listing of official functions by country and date in addition to expense reporting, and made available for public inspection.

House Organization, Scheduling & Action:

Committees must be elected within seven legislative days of a new Congress and hold organizational meetings not later than three legislative days after their election.

The Speaker would be required to announce a legislative schedule at the beginning of each session including target dates for major legislation and move to more five-day work weeks.

Authorization bills must be reported by May 15th prior to the beginning of the fiscal year in which they are to take effect.

New limits would be placed on the consideration of bills under suspension of the rules and on the consideration of commemorative legislation.

Strict new limits would be placed on special rules from the Rules Committee relating to amendment restrictions, budget and blanket waivers, and self-executing rules, and the right to recommit bills with instructions would be guaranteed.

The names of Members signing discharge petitions would be made public after 100 signatures had been secured.

Budgetary Reforms:

The Committees on Rules and Government Operations would be required to report legislation by May 31, 1991, giving the President special recission authority (subject to congressional disapproval) over appropriated items for which authorizing legislation has not been enacted.

The Rules Committee would be required to report by Dec. 31, 1991, its recommendations on the feasibility and advisability of converting to a biennial budget-appropriations process, with multi-year authorizations.

Automatic rollcall votes would be required in the House on the final passage of all appropriations, tax and pay raise bills and conference reports, and on the final adoption of budget resolutions and conference reports containing debt limit increases.

Limitation amendments would be permitted on appropriations bills.

Short-term continuing appropriations bills would be subject to the lesser of the House or Senate passed bills or the previous year's appropriations.

Any long-term continuing appropriations would be required to contain the full text of all matters being enacted and would be subject to the same points of order as regular appropriations bills regarding unauthorized and legislative provisions, subject to waiver only by a three-fifths vote.

Extraneous matters in reconciliation bills would be subject to deletion by points of order.

"A house divided against itself cannot stand."—A. LINCOLN.

INTRODUCTION

Nothing was more clear to the American people in the final chaotic weeks of the 101st Congress than that their system of government had broken down and was in need of a complete overhaul.

While some attribute this governmental breakdown to the divided party control of the Presidency and Congress, the main sources of paralysis can be found within the Congress itself. The Democrats' control of the House for 56 of the last 60 years has produced a bloated and muscle-bound bureaucracy characterized by a multiplicity of 158 semi-autonomous subcommittees with overlapping and tangled jurisdictions, competing interests and fierce turf fights.

Democratic leadership attempts to cut-through or circumvent this muddled maze by resort to ad hoc task forces and restrictive amendment procedures often compound the problem by moving the legislative process to smoke-filled back rooms—far from the public eye and even majority membership participation.

A direct result of this decline in the committee system is the bankruptcy of the congerssional budget, authorization, and appropriation process. Missed budget deadlines and deficit targets, the failure to consider authorization bills in a timely manner (if at all), and the increased use of appropriations and reconciliation measures for authorization purposes all contribute to this confused blur of authority, accountability and openness.

The disintegration of a deliberative legislative, budgetary and ovesight process exacerbates internal divisions within the leadership and committees. This spectacle of disarray, the turn, accelerates the erosion of public confidence in Congress.

With public policy-making beyond the influence of most Members it's little wonder they are consumed instead by constituent concerns and reelection efforts. If the House has been successful at anything, it is getting its Members reelected—well over a 95% return rate in recent years. At one time it was asserted that the first job of a congressman was to get reelected. Now it seems to be the exclusive occupation of many Members.

All this has not been lost on the American people, 73% of whom express disapproval for the job Congress is doing. This mood of discontent is a growing tide that will not recede until Congress gets serious about reforming itself and its campaign practices.

This House divided against itself cannot stand unless it immediately undertakes a radical rennovation effort. To this end the House Republican Conference pledges itself in this "Republican Reform Manifesto for a New House Revolution."

THE COMMITTEE SYSTEM

Congressional committees have existed from the First Congress as agents of the House in fashioning legislation and conducting investigations. Woodrow Wilson, in his 1885 treatise, Congressional Government, wrote that, "Congress in session is Congress on public exhibition, whilst Congress in its committee rooms is Congress at work." Congressional committees truly are the workshops of the national legislature in which the details of legislation are hammered-out on the anvil of compromise.

And yet, in recent years, the House committee system has deteriorated, and the quality of legislation and oversight has suffered accordingly. The reasons for this decline of the committee system are fairly evident. While the reforms of the seventies to make committee chairmen more accountable to their party caucuses have been laudable in intent, their effect has been to foster a proliferation of semi-autonomous subcommittees.

With this explosion of subcommittees and staff, Members have been saddled with more subcommittee assignments, making it nearly impossible to conscientiously perform any assignment. Committees and subcommittees have attempted to counter poor attendance with rules that permit business to be conducted with only one-third of the Members present and the liberal use of proxy votes. This phantom legislating has produced legislation that is less representative as well conceived than if more Members had actually been present.

Compounding the problem of legislative accountability is the practice of referring legislation to more than one committee. The House approved this procedure in 1974 but rejected an attempt to rationalize committee jurisdictions. The result has been a maze of tangled lines of responsibility among 22 committees and 158 subcommittees that is trangling the legislative process.

The authorizing committees are also falling prey to budgetary squeeze-out—sandwiched in time as they are between the adoption of a budget resolution and the beginning of the appropriations process. With less and less time in which to enact authorizations, fewer authorizations are being properly considered if at all. In fiscal year 1990, for instance, $55.5 billion was appropriated for 49 programs which had not been reauthorized.

In an attempt to bring some order out of this committee chaos, the majority leadership has resorted to a variety of devices that have rendered authorizing committees nearly obsolete. These include devising special rules making in order authorizing language not considered at the committee level and even appointing ad hoc leadership task forces to draft bills in secret, away from public committee hearings and meetings. Unreported authorizations are also loaded onto such omnibus bills as reconciliation, appropriations measures and even debt limit measures. It is not unusual for Members to have no report or information on such entire bills which have been developed outside the regular committee process. In summary, committees are becoming less and less relevant to the legislative process.

THE FLOOR SITUATION

Given the shambles in which the House committee system finds itself today, it perhaps should not seem surprising that autocratic procedures are increasingly being used in an attempt to restore a measure of "efficiency" to the House. Unfortunately, "efficiency" has become a euphemism for political expediency and advantage, and has again come at the expense of deliberation and representation.

Whereas only 15% of the bills coming through the Rules Committee 12 years ago were brought to the floor under "restrictive rules" which limit the amendments Members may offer, this percentage has increased with each succeeding Congress until it stands at 55% today. Just as the American people have been disenfranchised at the committee level with phantom legislative devices, they are being silenced on the House floor as well by such "gag" rules.

To further limit the amendment process, the majority leadership has increasingly been restricting the minority party's right since 1909 to recommit a bill with instructions in the form of a final amendment. Whereas a decade ago this right was limited less than 4% of the time, in the 101st Congress it was circumscribed on 20% of the bills brought through the Rules Committee.

Another way to avoid proper deliberation, amendments, and votes is the "suspension of the rules" procedure. Under this device bills can be brought-up without being reported from committee, are subject to only 40-minutes of debate, cannot be amended, and must receive a two-thirds vote to pass. Votes on suspension bills can be "clustered" on the day after the bills were actually debated. Whereas just a decade ago only around 37% of the measures passed by the House were considered under the suspension of rules procedure, today the number of suspension bills passed comprises nearly 50% of all bill passed.

If the American people watching the House in action from the visitors' galleries or on TV are confused by all these goings on, they aren't too-far removed from their own Representatives who must often scramble to find out what it is they are voting on.

If, as Wilson observed, the "Congress in session is Congress on public exhibition," then today it is a poor exhibition of the representative and deliberative democracy the Founders intended. Much of this is traceable to the breakdown in the committee workshops. But the floor devices used to compensate for this breakdown have only made things worse both in terms of representation and the quality of legislation.

CONCLUSION

The paradox of the modern House is that while its Members are, by all measures, smarter, more dedicated and harder working than their predecessors, the House as a whole does not begin to equal the sum of its parts. The reason is easy to discern in the way the House is organized, or, more accurately, disorganized to promote the interests of its individual components—Members and subcommittees, over institutional and national interests. It is therefore little wonder that while 57% of the American people may approve of their own congressman, only 23% approve of the job the Congress is doing.

(A Summary of the Republican House Rules Substitute for H. Res. 5, 102nd Congress, January 3, 1991)

The rules of the House of the 101st Congress would be adopted as the rules of the 102nd Congress with the following amendments:

(1) Campaign Reform.—The House Administration Committee would be directed to report a campaign reform bill no later than June 30, 1991, other committees no later than July 31, 1991, and the Rules Committee would be directed to bring the bill to the floor under an open amendment process not later than three legislative days thereafter.

(2) Committee Jurisdiction Realignment.—The Rules Committee would be directed to study and report not later than Dec. 31, 1991, recommendations for realigning committee jurisdictions along more rational and functional lines to eliminate duplication, overlap and inefficiences in the present system.

(3) Veto Messages.—Immediately after the reading of a veto message, the Speaker would be required to state the question on the reconsideration of the vetoed bill, without intervening motion, thereby giving the House a chance to vote immediately on overriding the veto.

(4) Broadcast Coverage.—The Speaker would be required to provide uniform visual broadcast coverage of the House throughout the day which could include periodic views of the entire Chamber if they do not detract from the person speaking.

(5) House Scheduling Reform.—The Speaker would be required at the beginning of each session to announce a legislative program for the session that would include target dates for the consideration of major legislation, weeks in which the House would be in session (with full, five-day work weeks assumed unless otherwise indicated), district work periods, and the target date for adjournment. The Speaker would also be required to consult with the minority leader in developing each week's legislative program.

(6) Oversight Reform.—Committees would be required to formally adopt and submit to the House Administration Committee by March 1st of the first session their oversight plans for that Congress. It would not be in order to consider the funding resolution for any committee which does not submit its oversight plans as required. The House Administration Committee, after consultation with the majority and minority leaders, would report the plans to the House by March 15th together with its recommendations, and those of the joint leadership group to assure coordination between committees. The Speaker would be authorized to appoint ad hoc oversight committees for specific tasks from the membership of committees with shared jurisdiction. Committees would be required to include an oversight section in their final activity report at the end of a Congress.

(7) Multiple Referral of Legislation.—The joint referral of bills to two or more committees would be abolished, while split and sequential referrals would be retained, subject to time limits and designation by the Speaker of a committee of principal jurisdiction.

(8) Early Committee Organization.—Committees must be elected within seven legislative days of the convening of a new Congress and must hold their organization meeting not later than three legislative days after their election.

(9) Committee Ratios.—The party ratios on committees would be required to reflect that of the full House (except for the Standards Committee which is bipartisan). The requirement would extend to select and conference committees as well.

(10) Subcommittee Limits.—No committee (except Appropriations) could have more than six subcommittees, and no Member could have more than four subcommittee assignments.

(11) Proxy Voting Ban.—All proxy voting on committees would be prohibited.

(12) Open Committee Meetings.—Committee Meetings, which can now be closed for any reason, could only be closed for national security, personal privacy or personnel reasons.

(13) Majority Quorums.—A majority of the membership of a committee would be required for the transactions of any business.

(14) Report Accountability.—Committee reports on bills would be required to include the names of those members voting for and against reporting a bill or, in the case of a nonrecord vote, the names of those members actually present when the bill is ordered reported.

(15) Committee Documents.—Any committee prints or documents to be made available to the public which have not been approved by the committee must contain a disclaimer to that effect on their cover, may not contain the names of committee members other than the chairman authorizing the printing, and may not be made public until at least three days after they have been circulated to committee members.

(16) Foreign Travel Reports.—All Members and staff taking part in foreign travel at House expense would be required to disclose their official itinerary (including meetings, interviews, functions, inspections) by country and date in addition to currently required expense disclosure, and such reports would be available for public inspection in the offices of each committee not later than 60-days after the completion of travel.

(17) Same Day Consideration of Rules Committee Reports.—An order of business resolution from the Committee on Rules could not be considered on the same calendar day as reported, or the subsequent calendar day of the same legislative day, except by a two-thirds vote of the House.

(18) Permitting Instructions in Motion to Recommit.—The Rules Committee could not report an order of business resolution which prevented a motion to recommit, including one with amendatory instructions.

(19) Restrictive Rule Limitation.—It would not be in order to consider any order of business resolution from the Rules Committee restricting the right of Members to offer germane amendments unless the chairman of the Committee orally announces to the House, at least four legislative days before the Rules Committee meeting on the matter, that less than an open rule might be recommended by the committee.

(20) Limitation on Self-Executing Rules.—It would not be in order to consider any order of business resolution from the Rules Committee that provides for the automatic passage of any bill, joint resolution or conference report, or adoption of any motion, amendment, or resolution, except by a two-thirds House vote on agreeing to such consideration.

(21) Budget Waivers.—Any report from the Committee on Rules on a resolution waiving any provisions of the Budget Act against any bill would be required to include an explanation and justification of the waiver together with a summary or text of any comments received from the Budget Committee regarding the waiver. A separate vote could be demanded on any such waiver in a rule, subject to the requisite votes required by the Budget Act for such a waiver. Blanket waiver rules would require a two-thirds vote for consideration.

(22) Committee Staffing.—Committee funding resolutions could not be considered until the House has first adopted a resolution from the House Administration Committee setting an overall limit on committee staffing for the session. The minority would be entitled to up to one-third of the investigative staff funds, on request. The overall committee staff limit for the 102nd Congress could not be more than 90% of the total at the end of the 101st Congress.

(23) Commemorative Calendar.—A Commemorative Calendar would be created on which unreported commemoratives would be placed at the written request of the chairman and ranking minority member of the Post Office Committee. The Calendar would be called twice a month and any two objections would cause a commemorative to be removed from the Calendar.

(24) Automatic Roll Call Votes.—Automatic roll call votes would be required on final passage of appropriations, tax and Member pay raise bills and conference reports, and on final adoption of budget resolutions and conference reports containing debt limit increases.

(25) Appropriation Reforms.—The present restrictions on offering limitation amendments to appropriations bills would be abolished. Short-term continuing appropriations (30-days or less) could only provide for the lesser spending amounts and more restrictive authority as provided in either the House or Senate passed bills, the conference agreement, or the previous year's Act, and a three-fifths House vote would be required to waive this requirement. Long-term continuing appropriations measures (more than 30-days) would be required to contain the full text of the provisions to be enacted; the present prohibition on legislative language and unauthorized matters in appropriations measures would be extended to long-term CRs. Points of order and amendments to provisions in long-term CRs not previously agreed to by the House could only be denied by a three-fifths vote. Cost estimates would be required in reports on long-term CRs. Reports on all general appropriations bills, including long-term CRs would be required to include not only a listing of legislative provisions contained in the measures (as presently required), but of all unauthorized activities being funded by the measure.

(26) Reconciliation Limitation.—It would not be in order to report in a reconciliation bill, or consider as an amendment thereto, a provision which is not related to a committee's reconciliation instructions to either reduce spending or raise revenues. Determination would be made by the Budget Committee.

(27) Authorization Reporting Deadline.—It would not be in order to consider any bill authorizing budget authority for a fiscal year if reported after May 15 preceding the beginning of the fiscal year (former Budget Act requirement).

(28) Pledge of Allegiance.—The Pledge of Allegiance would be required as the third order of business each day.

(29) Suspension of the Rules.—Measures could not be considered under the suspension of the rules procedure except by direction of the committee(s) of jurisdiction or on the request of the chairman and ranking minority member of such committee(s). No measure could be considered under suspension which authorizes or appropriates more than $50 million for any fiscal year. Notice of any suspension must be placed in the Congressional Record at least one day in advance of its consideration together with the text of any amendment to be offered to it. No constitutional amendment could be considered under suspension.

(30) Discharge Motions.—The Clerk of the House would be required to publish in the Congressional Record the names of those Members signing a discharge petition once a threshold of 100 signatures has been reached, and to publish an updated list of names at the end of each succeeding week.

(31) Inclusion of Views with Conference Reports.—Members of conference committees would be permitted three calendar days in which to file supplemental, minority, or additional views to be published with conference reports.

(32) Intelligence Committee Oath.—Members and staff of the Select Committee on Intelligence would be required to take an oath that they will not directly or indirectly disclose to any unauthorized person any classified information received in the course of their duties except by the approval of the committee or of the House.

(33) Accuracy of Congressional Record.—A new rule would be added to include the recommendations of the bipartisan Task Force on the Congressional Record of the House Administration Committee in the 101st Congress. The rule would require that the Record be a verbatim account of proceedings subject only to technical, grammatical or typographical corrections by the Member speaking. Unparliamentary remarks could only be deleted from the Record by unanimous consent or order of the House. Violations of the rule would be subject to the authority of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct.

(34) Special Rescission Authority.—The Committees on Rules and Government Operations would be directed to report by May 30, 1991, legislation giving the President authority to rescind budget authority for which an authorization has not been enacted, unless Congress enacts a joint resolution disapproving the rescission within 45-days. If the committees do not report, automatic discharge of the first such bill introduced is provided.

(35) Biennial Budget-Appropriations Process.—The Rules Committee would be required to study and report its recommendations no later than Dec. 31, 1991, on the advisability and feasibility of converting to a biennial budget/appropriations process, together with multi-year authorizations.

(36) Applicability of Certain Laws to Congress.—The appropriate committees of Congress would be required to report, not later than June 30, 1991, legislation applying certain Federal health, safety, labor and civil rights laws to Congress. Automatic discharge is provided for the first such comprehensive bill if they do not all report.

Summary of Comparative Data on the U.S. House of Representatives

(1) Time in Session.—The House in the 101st Congress was in session 281 days, 69 days less than the 91st Congress and 25 days less than the 96th. At the same time, the 101st Congress averaged six hours a day, compared with 4.6 hours a day for the 91st Congress, and 5.8 hours per day for the 96th [Table 1].

(2) Legislative Output.—The 101st Congress House reported 635 public measures—635 measures (44%) less than the 91st and 243 measures (28%) less than the 96th. It passed 968 measures, 162 (14%) fewer than the 91st and 39 bills (4%) more than the 96th [Table 1].

Whereas the 101st Congress did not act on 66 reported measures (10%); 61 reported measures (5%) were not acted on by the 91st, and 131 (15%) were not acted on in the 96th Congress.

(3) Commemoratives v. Substantive Enactments.—The 101st Congress enacted 232 commemoratives or 36% of all public laws—164 more commemoratives than enacted by the 91st Congress and 136 more than the 96th Congress. That left 418 substantive enactments in the 101st Congress—209 substantive laws (33%) less than the 91st Congress and 99 (19%) less than the 96th Congress [Table 1].

(4) Committees, Subcommittees, Staff and Costs.—The number of standing committees has remained relatively constant over the 20 years—21 in the 91st, 22 in the 96th, and 22 in the 101st. But, the number of subcommittees has risen from 136 to 158, a 40% increase. The number of committee staff over that two decade period has risen from 738 to 2,109—a 186% increase. The cost of operating the House in a two-year Congress has risen from $203 million in 1969–70 to $1.13 billion in 1989–90—a 457% increase—an average increase of 23% a year. [Table 1].

(5) Proxy Voting.—Of the 22 standing and 5 select committees in the House in the 101st Congress, 22 permitted proxy voting and only 5 prohibited it [Table 2].

(6) One-Third Quorums.—Of the House standing and select committees in the 101st Congress, 18 had rules permitting one-third of the membership to transact all business except reporting a measure, while only 9 did not [Table 2].

(7) Member & Staff Party Ratios on Committees.—Whereas Democrats comprised 60% of the House membership in the 101st Congress, they held an average of 61% of the committee and select committee seats (excluding Standards which is 50–50). And majority staff average 76% of all staff on the standing and select committees. Finally, the average committee ratio of staff to Members was 1.9 to 1, with one committee weighing-in with a staff to Member ratio of 3.6:1 (Budget), one at 3.4:1 (Post Office) and two at 3.3:1 (Appropriations and Energy and Commerce [Table 3].

(8) Open v. Restrictive Rules.—Whereas in the 95th Congress, of the 211 order of business resolutions or "rules" reported from the Rules Committee, 179 (85%) were open and only 32 (11%) restricted the amendment process, by the 101st Congress only 47 (45%) of the 104 rules granted were open while 57 (55%) were restrictive [Table 4].

(9) Restricting Instructions in Motions to Recommit.—Whereas the Rules Committee restricted the minority its right to offer amendatory instructions prior to final passage of a bill only three times (1.4% of total rules) in the 95th Congress, eight times (3.7%) in the 96th, three times (2.5%) in the 97th, and only once (0.6%) in the 98th, it restricted this right 14 times (12.2%) in the 99th Congress, 24 times (19.5%) in the 100th Congress, and 21 times (20%) in the 101st Congress [Table 5].

(10) Self-Executing Rules.—The practice of providing that, upon the adoption of an order of business resolution, an amendment or measure would automatically be agreed to, is called a "self-executing rule." Such a rule was used only once in the 95th Congress, never in the 96th, twice in the 97th, five times in the 98th, 20 times (16% of all rules) in the 99th, and 26 times (16%) in the 100th. In the 101st Congress the trend was down somewhat with only 13 self-executing rules (8% of the total) [Table 6].

(11) Unauthorized Appropriations.—More and more programs are being appropriated for without the required enactment of authorization measures. In fiscal 1989, some 31 laws totalling $23 billion in appropriations were not reauthorized; and in fiscal 1990, 49 such laws totalling $55.5 billion were unauthorized [Table 7].

(12) Budget Act Waivers.—Instances in which order of business resolutions or "rules" were reported from the Rules Committee waiving specific sections of the Budget Act or waiving all points of order, have grown since the enactment of the Budget Act in 1974. Whereas such waivers comprised only 19% of all rules granted in the 96th Congress, by the 99th Congress such waivers reached a record 65% of all rules. In the 100th Congress waivers dropped to 51% of all rules. But the trend was back up in the 101st Congress with 90 waivers in all, including 27 specific waivers and 63 blanket waivers, comprising 56% of all rules granted [Table 8].

(13) Suspension of the Rules.—Measures considered under the suspension of the rules procedure are debatable for only 40-minutes, are not subject to amendment (unless an amendment is presented with the bill when called-up), and require a two-thirds vote for passage. Whereas suspensions constituted on average 36% of all public bills and joint resolutions passed by the House in the 95th–99th Congress, that percentage increased to 48% in the 100th Congress, and 52% in the 101st Congress [Table 9].

TABLE 4.—OPEN VS. RESTRICTIVE RULES, 95TH–101ST CONGRESSES

Congress (years)	Total rules granted[1]	Open rules[2]		Restrictive rules[3]
		No.	Percent	No.	Percent

100th (1987–88)	123	66	54	57	46
101st (1989–90)	104	47	45	57	55
Total	1,042	713	68	329	32

[1] Total rules counted are all order of business resolutions reported from the Rules Committee which provide for the initial consideration of legislation, except rules on appropriations bills which only waive points of order. Original jurisdiction measures reported as privileged are also not counted.

[2] Open rules are those which permit any Member to offer any germane amendment to a measure so long as it is otherwise in compliance with the rules of the House. The parenthetical percentages are open rules as a percent of total rules granted.

[3] Restrictive rules are those which limit the number of amendments which can be offered, and include so-called modified open and modified closed rules, as well as completely closed rules, and rules providing for consideration in the House as opposed to the Committee of the Whole. The parenthetical percentages are restrictive rules as a percent of total rules granted.

101st	104	21	20.0

[1] Only rules providing for the initial consideration of legislation are included and not rules providing for the consideration of conference reports, Senate amendments to a House bill, or appropriations rules which only provide waivers and do not affect the amendment process.

[2] Rules which restrict the right to offer motions to recommit with instructions include those which deny instructions or which in any way limit the right to offer an amendment in recommittal instructions.

[1] This includes all rules granted by the Committee and not just those providing for the initial consideration of a bill.

[2] Self-executing rules are defined here as those order of business resolutions which provide for the automatic adoption of an amendment (or other matter) upon the adoption of the rule, thus eliminating the need for a separate vote on the substance of the matter. Rules containing more than one self-executing provision are only counted once for the purposes of this table.

[1] Sec. 302(a) requires that the joint explanatory statement on a budget resolution conference report include an allocation by committee of outlays, and new budget-, entitlement-, and credit authority.

[2] Sec. 302(c) prohibits the consideration of any legislation reported from a committee which has not filed its section 302(b) suballocations.

[3] Sec. 302(f) prohibits the consideration of legislation which exceeds a committee's sec. 302(b) suballocation for discretionary new budget authority, new entitlement authority, or new credit authority.

[4] Sec. 303(a) prohibits the consideration of legislation providing new budget authority, new entitlement authority, new credit authority, or a change in revenues or public debt before the budget resolution for that year is adopted. [Note: This provision was modified with the enactment of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings I, to exempt from the point of order any appropriation bill considered in the House after May 15th, even though a final budget resolution is not in place (P.L. 99–177, effective Dec. 15, 1985).]

[5] Sec. 305(a) prohibits consideration of a budget resolution prior to the sixth day after it is reported.

[6] Sec. 311 prohibits consideration of any legislation which would exceed the outlay ceiling or revenue floor contained in the most recent budget resolution.

[7] Sec. 401(a) prohibits consideration of legislation providing new contract or borrowing authority not provided for in appropriations acts.

[8] Sec. 401(b) prohibits the consideration of legislation providing new entitlement authority which becomes effective during the fiscal year which ends in the calendar year in which the bill is reported.

[9] Sec. 402(a) prohibits the consideration of any bill authorizing new budget authority for a fiscal year if not reported on or before May 15th preceding the beginning of such fiscal year. [Note: This provision was repealed with the enactment of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings I on Dec. 15, 1985.]

[10] Blanket waivers counted here are those provisions in a rule which waive all points of order against a bill or committee amendment in the nature of a substitute made in order as original text for amendment purposes. Not only do blanket waivers set aside all standing House rules, but all provisions of the Budget Act as well.

[11] To provide a constant for comparison purposes, sec. 402(a) waivers have been subtracted from total waivers here because the section was repealed on Dec. 15, 1985 (see ff. 9 above).

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues know, I had planned to offer during the Democratic caucus, with the support of chairmen from other legislative committees, an amendment to rule X, clause 4 of the House rules. The amendment that I circulated to the caucus on November 30, 1990, would have clarified the jurisdiction of the legislative committees to consider and report bills and resolutions and to make recommendations to the Budget Committee establishing fees, charges, or assessments without running afoul of rule XXI, clause 5(b), which allows a point of order against tax and tariff measures originating in committees other than Ways and Means.

At the suggestion of the Speaker, however, our committee, the Committee on Ways and Means, the Parliamentarian, and the Speaker's staff entered into discussions about the matter. As a result, I understand that the Speaker plans today to issue a guidance statement regarding rule XXI after the House adopts rules for the 102d Congress. It will clarify the difference between a fee and a tax so that standing legislative committees can comply with rule XXI, clause 5(b). I will not at this time presume to state the Speaker's guidance, as that is his prerogative. I merely want to explain, by way of background, the history of this matter from the standpoint of the legislative committees.

Historically, legislative committees have reported fee, charge, and assessment provisions that have been enacted into law. Many have been adopted pursuant to the reconciliation process, but many others were adopted before reconciliation became a factor in 1980. They have been characterized as user fees, regulatory fees, and other types of assessments, including civil penalties. When paid, they have covered all or part of the direct and indirect costs of programs or activities of an agency that provides services or regulates those who pay. Such costs are not limited to, but can include administrative, enforcement, research, and monitoring expenses.

Some examples of such fees are: Land and water conservation fund fees imposed on park users; Federal Energy Regulatory Commission fees; fees for registration of commodity dealers; grazing fees; nuclear waste fees; fees for testing of iron, steel, and other materials; Clean Air Act fees; application fees for uninsured mortgages; export license fees; migratory bird hunting fees; and Nuclear Regulatory Commission fees, rail and pipeline safety fees, and fees to cover the activities of the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration.

In 1983, the House amended the House rules to include rule XXI, clause 5(b). Points of order under the rule, as amended, have generally related to the application of the Internal Revenue Code and customs laws. However, in a series of rulings on October 4–5, 1989, the Speaker applied that clause to several fee provisions included in a reconciliation bill, generally holding that fees within the meaning of rule XXI, clause 5(b), in order not to constitute a "tax or tariff," must be collected merely to compensate the assessing governmental entity for providing a service or for the expenses incurred in regulating an activity.

At that time, the Speaker recognized that the rule "does not preclude the inclusion of 'revenue' measures in bills reported by committees not having jurisdiction over revenues" and that it "is clear that certain assessment, fees, and charges, while constituting revenue measures, are not necessarily taxes or tariffs as those terms are properly understood in law and in accepted budget concepts." The Speaker observed that, "Taxes are collected for the purposes of raising revenue to offset the general costs of Government as well as to offset the costs of services provided to a more generalized group of beneficiaries."

Despite these very general comments, the rulings gave many of us a concern about the future of such provisions in bills from the legislative committees and in the budget process. It was a matter of controversy during House consideration of the clean air bill in the last Congress, as well as during reconciliation. Thus, together with other committee chairmen, I sought a rule change so that the legislative standing committees could continue to consider and report fees, charges, and assessments of various sorts in bills and other measures. The guidance issued today is intended to clarify the matter to allow that result.

I believe the guidance will be very helpful and should be tried in the next Congress in lieu of the rule change. The Speaker has expressed an interest in accommodating the legislative committees' historical prerogative of reporting and enacting fee provisions while simultaneously protecting the tax jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee and the constitutional prerogatives of the House. If the guidance proves unavailing, which I hope will not be the case, we can revisit the rule change for the 103d Congress.

I understand that the guidance will continue to sustain fee provisions like those enacted in the Clean Air Act and the land and water conservation fund law and those established to run regulatory agencies like the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. I believe it will be important in the health and securities areas, which are of immediate interest to the Committee on Energy and Commerce. It will clarify the rulings made during the reconciliation process in October 1989 that I earlier described.

I want to express my appreciation to the Speaker for his interest and participation in trying to resolve this important matter. I also want to express my appreciation to the other committee chairmen who wanted to resolve this issue and were willing to support a change in the House rules. I want to thank the Parliamentarians for their invaluable help. I believe the process was useful to them in learning more of the concerns of the committees and the nuances of the myriad fee programs, as well as the need for preserving this jurisdiction in the legislative committees in a manner that does not impinge on the tax jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means and does not affect the prerogatives of the House.

Most importantly, I commend the distinguished and able chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, DANNY ROSTENKOWSKI, for his cooperation and strong desire to work out this difficult and important issue. He and his staff have been very helpful and courteous in this endeavor, and I appreciate it. I feel all committees will benefit from the effort.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond briefly to the assertion that there is a breaking of the budget agreement through the imposition of the language of these rules. I would like to, in particular, express some thoughts about the controversy over OMB and CBO scoring, and what exactly was said in the summit, and how it was resolved.

Congressional participants in the summit repeatedly expressed concern to administration officials about the possibility of abusing the scorekeeping process as a way to achieve the administration's policy goals. As a result of these concerns, participants explored ways to minimize the possibility for manipulation.

Two basic approaches were considered. First, participants considered providing an estimating cushion for the pay-as-you-go sequester. This approach was strenuously opposed by several Republican congressional participants. When this approach proved unacceptable, OMB officials offered an alternative under which the OMB would provide a cost estimate at each stage of the legislative process which would then be binding on the agency. Although this alternative was only discussed in general terms, the estimate for a conference report would presumably be required to be available prior to the consideration of the conference report in each House, and OMB would be required to use that estimate for purposes of sequester calculations. Congressional participants strongly opposed this approach because it would necessitate, and indeed institutionalize, formal involvement by OMB and its staff in every aspect of legislative deliberation. This approach, in fact, could have given OMB more leverage over the legislative process than the approach contained in the new law, under which OMB's estimates of legislation are due after enactment.

In the end, it was not possible to reach a compromise on the issue of scorekeeping differences in direct spending and receipts legislation. When it became clear that we could not resolve this issue, we told administration officials that there was a real possibility that CBO scoring would be included in legislation presented to the President during the 102d Congress.

As we all know, this issue was raised in the final meeting on the budget, on October 26, 1990, hours before the reconciliation conference report was filed. The fact that it was not resolved to the satisfaction of congressional participants and that concerns remained about possible abuse of scorekeeping by OMB, and supported by the very fact of the agreement reached in the final meeting to require OMB and CBO to study differences in scorekeeping and provide a report to the Congress on this issue.

I would say that, if this rule is adopted, there are obvious alternatives that are available to the minority and to the administration.

First, it is critical to recognize that the new rule applies only to a subset of legislation considered by the House. It does not apply to appropriations or authorizations, but only to measures involving direct spending and receipts.

Second, if minority Members or others believe that the CBO estimate contained in the measure as reported is erroneous or inappropriate, they may seek to amend or strike the cost estimate.

In addition, a chairman who opposes the inclusion of the CBO estimate or believes it is unnecessary for a continuing measure may seek a waiver of the rule.

Third, since this is a House rule only, the issue as to whether to include the CBO estimate will be an issue for conference, and those who oppose inclusion can seek support for this position in the Senate.

Finally, of course, as the President's letter illustrates, the President can veto a bill which includes the CBO estimate, and he can also of course use the threat of veto to reach an accommodation on the scoring of a particular bill.

Finally, I think it is important to note that on the final meeting on October 26, again we did agree to require OMB and CBO to review their scorekeeping differences and report back to the Congress in May of 1991.

It well may be that the concerns that are felt on both sides can be bridged if some of the differences on scoring can indeed be bridged.

So, I really believe that this is an appropriate solution to this problem, and I am hopeful that in May of 1991 the problem can be put aside forever.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to our distinguished Republican leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the proposed package of rules offered by the Democrats and urge a vote against the previous question, so that we might adopt our substitute package. The rules package offered at the beginning of the Congress is very similar to a genetic code. It does not determine our fate entirely, but it is the structure in which much of the fate of this Congress will be determined.

Mr. Speaker, the majority's rules package offers us an inheritance of misery. Think of it: 22 committees, 158 subcommittees, with hopelessly tangled and knotted lines of responsibility; funds appropriated for unauthorized programs; restrictive rules limiting amendments; nearly 50 percent of our bills passed under suspension of the rules. And a unilateral change in the budget agreement against all precedent and against our tradition of keeping our word.

Now I understand the situation a little bit differently than the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT]. The Democratic rules package, in my judgment, reneges on that bipartisan budget agreement, just enacted less than 2 months ago. Quite frankly the discussion centered on enforcement and that was why we agreed as we did. Now to say, "Well, we've got a different view of it, and we're going to avoid subscribing to an agreement that we so judiciously agreed to just a short time ago." It is one thing to say there was always that opportunity for us to change the agreement by law, and that is true. To change the law by joint resolution, however, requires the President's signature.

But the Democrats are not doing that. They are attempting to bypass that whole procedure by incorporating the change in a rule. They create a point of order that can be raised against spending and receipts legislation unless a provision is inserted in that particular piece of legislation with CBO's scorekeeping.

Now that just flies directly in the face of the controversial issue of enforcement that we discussed at length in the budget agreement. One of the reasons I supported the budget agreement was, notwithstanding the tax increases that we had, we thought we had bona fide spending cuts that were bound by law and could not be changed. If we were to have any increases, we would also have offsets, otherwise a minisequester would occur. Now what the Democrats are attempting to do by the rules, not by a law, is to subjugate all those deliberations we had over that protracted period of time and duck the strong enforcement provisions agreed to by the participants.

Mr. Speaker, that is why we are offended. An agreement is an agreement. I talked about in my introduction of the Speaker about dealing fairly and squarely with people and honoring one's word. That has always been my method of operation around here, to have my word as good as my bond, as good as gold. It is disappointing when we break that word between agreeing parties, particularly in regard to the one piece of legislation that was so profound in this last session as to be maligned, and criticized and talked about for months. My view had always been, "You wait until next year and we'll show you how we have brought about some good by these spending caps written into law, and so hard to get around and avoid."

And what you are attempting to do here is circumvent the strong enforcement by this change in the rules. It is really in my judgment unconscionable. So obviously, I have to take exception to the rules you are proposing and urge my colleagues to vote down the previous question so that we may substitute our package of rules so well portrayed by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

If that fails, then I urge the Members to support a motion that the gentleman from New York or I will make, a motion to commit, that would negate this provision of the Democratic rules that undermines our budget agreement. It also calls for the Judiciary Committee to report out a balanced budget amendment for the consideration of the House no later than June 30, 1991.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would urge my colleagues to vote down the previous question. Hopefully, we can get our own substitute rules package adopted, and barring that, I urge the Members to support my motion to commit.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield control of the balance of our time on this side to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOYER). The gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] will be recognized to control the balance of the time on his side. The gentleman from Texas has 14 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] has 16 minutes remaining.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI].

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the proposed changes to the House rules. Some are alleging that the House rule requiring Congressional Budget Office and Joint Committee on Taxation outlay and revenue estimates to be included in revenue and entitlement bills undermines the credibility of the 1990 budget agreement. This is simply not the case. Instead, the proposed rule sends a strong message that we intend to live up to the agreement.

The budget agreement specified that any legislation which increased outlays for an entitlement program or reduced revenues must be paid for in each and every year for the next 5 years. To enforce that requirement, it was agreed that there would be an across-the-board, automatic cut in nonexempt direct spending programs if a bill were passed that was not budget neutral. The practical effect of this pay-as-you-go financing requirement will be that the Medicare Program will automatically be reduced or sequestered, and will compensate for about 80 percent of any enacted legislation which is not budget neutral. Members have a right to know when they cast their vote on the House floor whether or not Medicare and other direct spending entitlement laws are being changed. The proposed change to the House rule ensures that each Member will have this information.

The Committee on Ways and Means has lived up to the pay-as-you-go requirement for the past decade. For example, the Tax Reform Act of 1986 was revenue neutral over a 5-year period; the Family Support Act of 1988 was budget neutral; the catastrophic health insurance bill was budget neutral; and the child care bill approved by the committee last year was fully budget neutral.

To ensure that Medicare and other direct spending programs are not inadvertently sequestered requires that bills reported from a committee be budget neutral. This requires that cost estimates be prepared on each and every amendment that is offered in committee. OMB does not have the capacity or the staff to perform such a function. Furthermore, the Congressional Budget Office and the Joint Committee on Taxation already ably prepare cost estimates which are both independent and objective.

In addition, it is my view that last year's budget negotiators did not intend for OMB of this or any other administration to have the right to be involved in the day-to-day legislative activities of the Congress and its committees. Our system of government requires that the legislative branch be an equal and separate entity. That implies that Congress should work with congressional branch agencies in developing our legislative products. CBO and the Joint Committee on Taxation are independent of any member here. They are not political entities and their estimates reflect nonpartisan, objective analysis. By its very nature, OMB cannot make the same claim. Without this rule, the Director of OMB would have to review and prepare a cost analysis of any "chairman's mark" whether in the Ways and Means Committee or in any other committee of the Congress as well as all amendments that members wished to propose. This would be offensive to me as chairman and should be offensive to all Members of Congress on both sides of the aisle.

If the President believes that a bill is not budget neutral and that the CBO and JCT estimates that are included in a bill are substantially off the mark, the President can exercise his constitutional right to veto such a bill. I would hope that would not be necessary.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this proposed rules change is important to ensure that the congressional budget process enforces the pay-as-you-go concept in the 1990 budget agreement. I fully intend to support and enforce the pay-as-you-go discipline in my committee since it is a discipline that I have imposed on the Ways and Means Committee for the last decade. I urge all Members to support the rules change.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], who was just sworn in for the 17th time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend, the gentleman from New York, for yielding this time to me, and I rise in opposition to the rule.

Mr. Speaker, today, amidst the pomp and circumstance of a new Congress, we set the rules of the road by which this Chamber will operate for the next 2 years.

Now, as one of our first acts, we are invited to undo one of the major achievements of the last Congress.

For the first time, the President and the Congress agreed to try to control the fastest growing costs of government—the entitlement programs that spend automatically, without control. We said, if Congress wants new automatic spending programs, it has got to pay for them—pay-as-you-go.

Fiscal responsibility. The law gave the Office of Management and Budget the job of assuring the new spending was fully paid for. That was a conservative provision, no doubt about it. OMB is more concerned about the paying than the going.

Now, less than 3 months later, before this provision has even been tested, the majority wants to change that agreement. Unilaterally, they have decided they don't like that conservative restraint on new automatic spending. And that is what is most distressing.

Here we go. The most fundamental question facing the Congress today is whether we can get the deficit under control. We made a fragile, 5-year agreement with the administration to move toward controlling the deficit. And now, we are invited to start unraveling it.

The message is clear. If this rules change passes, Congress shows there is one thing it wants more than pay-as-you-go—it's play-as-you-go.

Support the effort to commit the majority rules change proposal. Strike the deal-breaking erosion of fiscal restraint.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak briefly on the proposed change regarding the bringing of congressional employees under the Fair Labor Standards Act, which was, I understand, addressed by the gentleman from New York.

We include our congressional employees now under the Fair Labor Standards Act, particularly the minimum wage law, by law. This rule change will not change that law. The majority members of the Committee on Education and Labor are satisfied that the leadership and the House Administration Committee are going to properly and legally address the categories for our employees to be in, whether they are covered or not covered. We trust that those who are covered will then suggest to us for legislative change that we allow compensatory time for service for time taken off.

So what we hope to do is this: We direct the leadership and we advise the House Administration Committee to abide by the law, and if there is a necessary change to the law concerning the overtime provision, they would refer them back to our committee. I certainly favor, and I think the majority of our Members favor, bringing all congressional employees under the comp time provision, much the same as those in municipal government and State government are included.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and for his clarification. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY] is correct that it would be the intent to bring back any change in either the exemption categories or in compensatory time, any change in law, to bring it back to the House for a vote, a separate vote, and to make it a change in law, not a change in the rules.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I assure the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] that that is my position as a subcommittee chairman under the Committee on Education and Labor, that there be no deviation. That the Committee on House Administration may set categories and may make recommendations, but if it is a matter of a legislative change, something that deviates from the act, I certainly will join the gentleman in saying the matter should be brought before the floor.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] that under this rule that is pending today, the Committee on House Administration would have the authority to implement regulations on this subject and that is the intention of the Committee on House Administration to do so.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROST. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would just note that as I heard what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] said, a member of the Committee on Rules, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania said, I hear them saying two different things.

I hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY] say that any change in the exemption categories, which are set by law, would require a change in the law and could not be changed under this resolution. I would note this resolution does appear to change that.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, as a member of the Committee on Rules and a member of the Committee on House Administration, I would respond to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT], it is the intention of this resolution that regulations be issued and that they be issued by the Committee on House Administration.

If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY] seeks to bring this matter up for a vote through his committee, he has the right to do that, but it is the intention that this matter be dealt with from this point forward by regulation.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH], the distinguished whip.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, let me say first of all that this vote will be a case study in why the American people are increasingly angry at Congress. Just a few months ago the taxpayers were told they have to pay more taxes in a budget deal, but that political spending in Washington will be controlled for 5 years.

Now, on the very first day we are back in session, the Democratic leadership is breaking its agreement with the President. The Democratic leadership says they are not breaking their word. President Bush, on the other hand, says this new rule breaks the deal, and he will veto any bill which includes this new bigger spending provision.

Every House Republican who was part of the budget negotiations agree the Democratic leadership has broken the deal. For the working taxpayer, what is at stake is very clear. The Democratic new rule provides for higher spending. It will have Democrat-controlled staffs estimate new spending, and the result will be higher spending. That higher spending will lead to calls for higher taxes. Already there are a number of leading Democrats talking about a variety of tax increases.

Ironicaly, the budget deal was supposed to last for 5 years. It is being broken on the very first day the House is sworn in.

The Republican amendment is quite clear. Not only does it reestablish the deal that was made last fall, not only does it reestablish the control on spending, but it provides for a very clear date certain to bring up a balanced budget amendment. It is in fact a clear choice.

Now, every Member in this House went home and campaigned against more taxes, against spending in Washington, in favor of a balanced budget. In the next few minutes we are going to have a clear choice. Every Member is going to get to walk back in this room and vote, and vote one way or another. They are going to vote to break their word with the President, they are going to vote to break their word with the taxpayer, they are going to vote to have higher spending and ultimately higher taxes, or they are going to vote to send the signal to bring up a balanced budget amendment. They are going to vote to send the signal to keep their word with the President and the American people, and they are going to vote that they want to control spending.

It is a very clear choice, and I think everyone back home ought to look at those campaign speeches from last fall and they ought to look at this vote, because this vote is real. It is the vote that has real impact on the real pocketbook of every American.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the Speaker as to the time remaining?

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. HOYER). The Chair would advise the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] that he has 7 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] has 11½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, what we have here is a rules package that says if you cannot live with it, change the rules and ignore whatever needs exist in this body for real reform.

Take, for example, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Last year we had a commission that told us that we needed more accuracy in the CONGRES-SIONAL RECORD. We were assured that we would not make the change then, but when we got to the new rules package, that this is one of the things that would be considered.

Well, maybe it was considered, but it was not included. So once again we are going to have a distorted CONGRESSIONAL RECORD because the Democratic majority will not live up to their obligation to make certain that the records of the House are an accurate reflection of what takes place in this body.

Take the Fair Labor Standards Act. We just had a discussion on the floor about that.

It turns out that the chairman of the subcommittee in the Committee on Education and Labor and the gentleman who has drafted the rules package are in complete difference as to the nature of what is happening here.

What it turns out is that the House has simply decided to throw out the law of the land with regard to the minimum wage and has decided to find a way that the House can work its way around it. So we really do not have to comply, like everybody else in the country does.

Take the budget deal. The budget deal last year was predicated on the fact that yes, we would raise taxes on the American people, but at the same time we were going to control spending in Washington.

What do we find out on the very first day of the new Congress? We find out that we are not going to control spending, that we are going to break the deal with the President of the United States, that we are going to figure out a way to use House rules as a mechanism for having brand new spending and much higher spending in the future.

It is very, very interesting how they plan to do this. It is very interesting that they are going to use the Committee on Rules as a vehicle for it, where they stack the ratios in the committee in a way that the minority cannot hope to get a fair ruling.

One of the things that was said by the majority leader that protects the minority is the fact one can go to the Committee on Rules for a waiver.

Big chance. Let us not kid ourselves. Let us not have a joke here. I mean, this is real stuff. That is what taxes are all about.

Now the American people are faced with massive tax increases and no control of spending, and the vote that we cast here in a few minutes will be on that issue.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, I worked as hard as any Member in this Congress to control spending. I was delighted last fall when the budget agreement included tough spending limitations and enforcement mechanisms. If I felt that the rule being proposed by the Democratic Caucus today would unravel the effect of that budget agreement, I would vote against it. But on the contrary, I think it will help us to adhere to and enforce that budget agreement.

We will still have the spending limitations for various categories of spending. We will still have a pay-as-you-go requirement. All of those important budget reforms will still apply.

The only question before us today is whether OMB or CBO will be the scorekeeper.

We have to ask ourselves several questions: does OMB have a better track record in terms of making budget estimates? I think the answer is no.

Does OMB use a more conservative set of economic assumptions? I think if you look at the record over the years, the answer to that question is also no.

Does OMB have a tradition of nonpartisanship in the development of its budget number? I think again the answer is no.

If you are looking for objectivity in setting budget numbers, if you are looking for a timely response so that the work of Congress can proceed, I think the only reliable agency that we have been able to turn to over the years is the Congressional Budget Office. For that reason I feel that this rules change is an appropriate change. It will help us identify accurate numbers, objective numbers by which to measure our work. I think in so doing it will help us to enforce and implement, rather than undermine, the budget agreement reached last fall.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRADISON].

□ 1450

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the rules proposed by the Democrats, but especially the provision that instructs the House to disregard the agreement just entered into with the administration by requiring the President to use congressional scorekeeping on all fiscal legislative measures.

The devious proposal is not only a violation of an agreement, it is a direct affront to the rule of law, in particular to a law of the land whose ink is barely dry.

Had the White House instructed the executive departments to disregard a key element of the budget agreement, the Democratic leadership in the Congress would have gone ballistic. They would have urged editorial writers all over the country to object to the executive branch putting itself above the law. But what we see here today is the Democratic Party putting itself above the law.

Furthermore, the Democrats can hardly plead ignorance; it was, predominately, their votes that enacted this provision into law as part of the Omnibus Reconciliation Budget Act of 1990; it was their leaders who negotiated this provision which the majority leader now wants to change. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee properly argues that the House should have CBO and Joint Tax Committee estimates before taking action on entitlement and tax changes. But he goes too far in arguing that OMB must be bound to follow these estimates in carrying out their sequestration responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the way to begin a new Congress. This shameless, unilateral action by House Democrats will poison the waters and make it all but impossible for the House to work in a bipartisan manner to craft vital legislation that the American people need.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING], the ranking Republican on the Education and Labor Committee, and myself and others in strong opposition to amendment 19, rule LI of this package. It is clear that what this rule does is to reexempt Congress from the Fair Labor Standards Act which we were finally covered by in the last session of Congress.

I say shame on this House, shame on the leadership for bringing this rule to us. For some 50 years Congress has been exempt from every single employee protection law that we have passed for the rest of the country. We are exempt from OSHA, we are exempt from civil rights, we are exempt from the Americans With Disabilities Act, we are exempt from AIDS discrimination, we are exempt from the National Labor Relations Act. We have been exempt from the Fair Labor Standards Act, and in what some say was the only good action taken by the 101st session of Congress, the only positive step was Congress did cover itself under the Fair Labor Standards Act to include Congress, congressional employees under those protections. But now rule LI provides for a reexemption.

Read it for yourself. The rule says that it will leave up to the House Administration Committee the determination of exemption categories and determination of permitting the use of compensatory time as compensation. Both exemption categories and compensatory time are spelled out specifically in the Fair Labor Standards Act by statute, and implemented by regulation of the Department of Labor.

Let us walk through what this means. It means, No. 1, a whole new set of exemptions. The law says exemptions for everyone else are professional, administrative and management, and yet this would provide for new categories thought to be called "legislative, essential, and representational," words and exemptions that are nowhere to be found in the law or either statute or regulation.

In 1989 the House of Representatives for the first time covered its own employees under a major labor law, the Fair Labor Standards Act. Today, with Item 19 of House Resolution 5, the House will attempt to reexempt its employees and set different rules for itself.

DETERMINATION OF EXEMPTION CATEGORIES

House Resolution 5 gives the House Administration Committee authority to determine exemption categories.

The FLSA includes three categories of exemptions which would apply to the House: professional, executive, and administrative.

Last fall, the House Administration Committee came up with three categories of employees who would be exempt from the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act: legislative, essential, and representational.

"Representational" employees could be caseworkers, receptionists, or legislative correspondents—all of whom are acting on behalf of their employers but most of whom do not meet the guidelines defining professional, executive, or administrative employees.

"Essential" employees could be just about anyone. When the House is in session late, staff is needed to keep the doors open, work the lights, make copies, answer phones, and so forth. These employees are essential, but again, not necessarily professional, executive, or administrative.

PERMITTING THE USE OF COMPENSATORY TIME

The FLSA is very specific about compensation for overtime. Overtime hours worked by covered employees must be compensated with wages at one and one-half times the regular rate.

Employees of a State or an interstate governmental agency may receive compensatory time off in lieu of overtime pay. Employees of Congress are nowhere given this option, and it would require an amendment to the law to change this.

AUTHORITY TO ISSUE RULES AND REGULATIONS

House Resolution 5 grants unlimited authority to the House Administration Committee to issue rules and regulations applying the FLSA to Congress. Apparently there would be no opportunity for review or comment by Members. The House Administration Committee should bring to the floor a resolution that offers guidance to Members on which employees are exempt—using FLSA guidelines—how to calculate overtime pay, how to treat holidays, mealtimes, and weekends, and other aspects of the law. But this House Resolution gives House Administration authority to unilaterally change the law and re-exempt Congress.

Congressional employees deserve the same rights and protections as private sector employees. Vote to defeat the previous question and to keep FLSA coverage for congressional employees.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, there is another reason we should be voting down the proposed rules changes by the Democratic majority.

During the budget battle of recent vintage, the Government of the United States was shut down or threatened to be shut down several times. We can never, never undergo that kind of possibility again.

What the Republican substitute, if allowed to be offered, would do is it would take a giant step toward preventing that very same poisonous shutdown of Government which we all seek to avoid. It would allow a continuing resolution, sadly which is needed from time to time, to go into automatic effect if we should fail to meet our responsibilities of a budget reconciliation, and thus prevent the shutdown of Government. We ought to give it a chance to work.

What infamous kind of thing it is to have the Government of the United States shut down while the Armed Forces of the United States are deployed in Saudi Arabia. That actually happened to us last time. Never again.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOUGHTON], who voted for the Deficit Reduction Act because of the enforcement procedure that the Democrats are doing away with today.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I speak against the rule changes, and specifically the change in the scoring system. I think it is wrong. I think it is inappropriate and I think the timing is bad.

My only hope is that this will not be a party line up or down vote, because I do not think it is a party issue. I just want to make two points.

I do not know what happened at the meetings. I was not there. But I assume a word is a word, and some people who I respect felt that the word was given, and if you agree to something you ought to stick with it.

Here is something that we have not even tried once and now we are trying to change it.

I have spoken to the heads and exheads of the CBO, and they agree with me. There is potentially a problem with the scorekeeping system. But that is not a problem really, because the conditions change, and the forecasting process is in terms of policy impact not economic changes.

I would just like to say one other thing. Here we are, the first session of the 102d Congress, and we are talking about something where the world is on the verge of catastrophe. I would only hope that we would not change the rule and get on with the business that we were sent here to do.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McEWEN], a new member of the Rules Committee.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, as I understand the budget package during the eruption that took place in October it was that when we came back from the summit, Mr. Sununu and Mr. Darman negotiating on behalf of the administration said that ladies and gentlemen, we had forced the gentleman to eat his lips, but we had reached an agreement that will be advantageous again in the future. That was that over the next 5 years we decided upon various spending categories, and whenever Congress overspends we have the authority to reduce spending in that same area so that we do not supersede these limits over the next 5 years.

Some of us over here, most of us over here looked at Mr. Sununu and said Mr. Sununu, they are not going to abide by it. Come March, come April, they are going to just jump out of it, and you are going to be stuck with new taxes, and they are going to increase the spending anyhow. And he said, "Oh, no, you don't understand. We had a big summit, and we argued about it, and we even fought a little, and decided that OMB should decide it, and they conceded and gave a little, and we gave up a little with the tax package." And the Speaker came down here in the well and pleaded with us to come together on a bipartisan basis, for the good of the country, and so by a vote of a very narrow margin we decided to do it.

Some of us went back home and said, I said just a week ago to the chamber of commerce in Dayton, OH, that this thing would not last until March. I was wrong. It did not last through the first day.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. RHODES].

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, as one of those minority of the minority that voted for both the summit package and ultimately the Budget Reconciliation Act, I guess I am standing up here today to say thank you to the majority for teaching me a very valuable lesson. Those of us here on our side who did not support the reconciliation bill but who are protesting this rules change because it is a breaking of a word really ought to be coming to the well and saying to those of us who trusted, "We told you so." You did tell us so. You told us that, all the way along, taxes are permanent, and that spending limits will not last. You were right. We were wrong.

We trusted.

The point is not whether CBO can do a better job than OMB. The point is not whether or not you may have a better idea as to how to do the scorekeeping. The point is that you came to all of us and you said, "We have a sugar coating to the very bitter pill of taxation."

I caught unshirted hell at home for my vote on that reconciliation bill, and I was able to say, "Yes, there are taxes, but there are spending limitations."

It is too bad I was only half right.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Kansas [Mrs. MEYERS].

Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, a great many Members voted for the budget resolution because of the possibility of controlling spending.

I do not know about other districts, but my district in Kansas did not demand of me any new taxes, but they did want something done about controlling the deficit and controlling spending.

The spending caps in that resolution promised to be the most effective control on spending suggested yet. These caps were intermittent, and they did not offset one area of spending against another. If the overspending was in defense, the cutback had to be in defense. They were effective.

This reneges on that bipartisan agreement.

The majority party is incorporating in House rule, not law, where you do not need our votes, after making an agreement last October where you did need our votes to reach agreement.

This rule change it a betrayal. It is betrayal of all of us who voted for the budget agreement, of those in the country who believe that getting control of spending and the deficit is the most important domestic issue before Congress today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOYER). The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes. I believe that mine would be the only request on this side. We are dividing our time, and we are 2 minutes short.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY] is recognized for 2 minutes. This will not count against the 1 minute that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] has remaining.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I express my appreciation to my colleagues for understanding.

All of the Orwellian excellence in the world cannot obscure the fact of what we are doing.

Most of the debate on the majority side has really not clarified the question, but, in fact, tried to obscure it.

The fact is that we are raping the budget agreement that was reached only 3 months ago. That is what it is.

You might tell us it is adultery because it involves consenting adults. We are trying to tell you we are not consenting.

We are told that there were technical agreements that everyone understood were to be made later. That is what we were told. Here is the White House understanding. I read the President's message to the Speaker:

> This rule would change the new pay-as-you-go enforcement mechanism by overturning a specifically, specifically negotiated and agreed scoring provision. More important, if the proposed rule is adopted, the House of Representatives will have begun the 102nd Congress by undercutting the credibility of the entire budget agreement.

That is what we are doing, Mr. Speaker. Call it adultery. It is rape.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON].

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the substance of this proposal, and with deep concern for the subversion of the legislative process contained in this package.

The substance strikes at the heart of the budget agreement. The process strikes at the heart of democracy, and so I am going to use such time as I may consume, and I am not going to recognize the authority of the Speaker's gavel, because I want to make very clear the implications of what is happening here.

First of all, this House is operating under precedent, not under rule. Precedent is something that we honor because we hold ourselves to a standard of ethical conduct that requires honoring our rules.

If we do not hold ourselves to that standard of ethical conduct, then the line between self-government and chaos disintegrates. If we cannot operate ethically, we cannot govern ourselves as a free nation. So, honor is everything; word is bond.

I choose not to be governed by the gavel, because I want to demonstrate that where word is not bond, democracy cannot survive.

The majority leader himself made my case. He said that in the summit agreement, the summiteers could not agree, so they adopted the OMB right to determine spending levels. But, he said, we—the Democrats—told the President that we might seek to change this part of the package, and he himself said, and you can look in the RECORD tomorrow, he himself used the words that, "We might propose changing this portion of the law, and the President could veto it." That is the proper course of action.

If we were doing that here today, democracy in its gut and at the level of trust that it demands would not be at risk; but the majority party is not proposing a statutory change for which they could be held accountable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. The majority party is proposing a rules change.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state to the gentlewoman that whatever point she is trying to make that the Chair is going to make a point.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. It does not change the law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will operate under proper decorum.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Rather through the rule, they are intending to abrogate the content and meaning of the law. One could ask ones self, why is this happening today? It is happening for a very simple reason. It is happening for the same simple reason that Wall Street was crippled by greed. On Wall Street individual greed took precedence over that code of conduct that had in the past regulated business decisions, the conduct of business, on Wall Street.

What is happening here is that individual desire for spending programs is overriding the public interest in deficit reduction.

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman is out of order. The gentlewoman is making the point of not folowing the rules.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. I know this is unpleasant.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman will remove herself from the well within 30 seconds.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. It is imperative that some of us stand up for the fundamental principles on which democracy rests, and I will be done soon, but I will finish.

In the budget agreement that we adopted, we allowed a significant amount of spending increase and tax increases, and then we adopted a discipline over spending in the future years of the agreement.

Who in their right mind would have thought that we could have increased HHS spending 14 percent under a summit agreement whose goal it was to reduce the deficit?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. By implementing the budget agreement through such large first-year increases, we ate up our spending opportunity for this year as well. This rules change is being proposed because Democrat

Members are now angry that they ate up the spending last year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas seek time?

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. And that consequently, this year the summit agreement will require us to cut spending. To avoid having to discipline spending, these rules propose that we adopt another monitor of spending, another body to estimate costs, and thereby make room for new spending under a budget agreement that requires cuts.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. They are going to increase spending as they desire, abrogating the public interest in deficit reduction. In other words, those supporting this rules proposal now are subverting the fiscal constraint sections for the specified purpose of allowing more spending than the summit agreement would allow.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, has the time of the other side expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the other side has expired. The gentleman from Texas has 5 minutes remaining.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. That is why this, today's debate, is happening. We are at a point where individual desires to spend on our own special interest programs are overriding the larger public interest in deficit reduction to which we as a Congress committed ourselves. Frankly, I feel personally compelled to demonstrate the consequences to democracy of the destruction of the moral principles that underly our form of government.

Just as my unwillingness to honor the rules of House debate creates havoc, so the majority party's unwillingness to adhere to a negotiated deal to which they gave their word, is deeply and fundamentally violative of the trust that is essential to democracy succeeding.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. As I said, I am not going to talk at length but only for the very few minutes necessary to make clear my concern with the substance and process violations in this rules proposal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. GONZALEZ. The gentlewoman is out of order and is defying the Chair's ruling and, therefore, I am imploring the Chair to exercise its authority to enforce the rules of the House by summoning the Sergeant at Arms and presenting the mace.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may do that.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. I regret that the majority party on such an important matter refused to allow Members the time we need, and I particularly regret this demonstration of oppression of the minority as democracy simply cannot survive if the minority's right to debate is deeply compromised. We must do better than this in the months ahead. We must reject these rules. We must come back with a rules package that honors statutory law and that does not seek to change law through the subterfuge of rules changes. We must come back with a package that honors the standard of ethical conduct on which this House has always depended.

I thank the Speaker.

☐ 1510

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of concluding debate, I yield the remaining time to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Budget, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me urge support for the rules. The majority party, Democrats, control the House, and were elected by the people of this Nation to control the House. We intend to operate under the rules that we propose for the House. These rules are fair. They are balanced. They are responsible. They provide for the orderly operation of the House. That is our responsibility. That is what we fulfill today.

Specifically, on the issue of OMB and CBO, relating to the scoring of pay-as-you-go legislation; for those Members who voted for the budget agreement, let me address my remarks to those who voted for the budget agreement. It is not the intent of the leadership to in any way undermine the budget agreement. The issue here is not whether or not we enforce the budget agreement. We will enforce the budget agreement. The issue is not whether or not we will have pay-as-you-go requirements. We will have pay-as-you-go requirements. Indeed, the issue is not whether or not there will be sequester. The fact is that CBO in its scoring could indeed produce sequester with regard to pay-as-you-go legislation. Those are not the issues here.

The issue here is one issue alone: Who will be the scorekeeper for the House of Representatives when it comes to pay-as-you-go legislation, moving through this committee? The official scorekeeper of the House of Representatives in the Congress is the Congressional Budget Office. It scores authorizing bills, it scores appropriation bills, it scores, with the help of the Joint Committee, tax bills. It scores whether or not we have fulfilled our goals under the budget resolution. Therefore, it is incumbent that CBO be our official scorer when it comes to pay-as-you-go legislation.

Now, I recognize the conflict that has been created by Gramm-Rudman with regards to OMB and the use of sequester, and indeed OMB has the authority when it looks at overall deficit numbers, to establish whether or not we have breached those overall deficit numbers. The issue under this agreement is individual pay-as-you-go bills, and the question is: Is OMB going to score for the committee and for the House? Are they going to be the principal scorekeeper, or is CBO going to be the principal scorekeeper?

Now, what is the problem with the Office of Management and Budget? There are several. First of all, it is a branch of the executive branch of government. It is part of the executive branch of government. It basically advocates policy on the part of the executive branch of government. CBO does not do that. Third, there have been differences in scoring in major areas. For example, with regard to the issue on taxation, the capital gains. There was a difference of almost $21 billion between OMB and CBO. When it came to Medicare, there was a difference of $7 billion. When it came to food stamp legislation, almost 336-percent difference between numbers recommended by CBO and numbers by OMB.

So those were the legitimate concerns that came up during the budget summit. A lot of people have talked here about the issue of what was agreed to or not agreed to in the budget summit. I was chairman of the task force on the budget process. This was a disputed issue because of the very concerns that I have raised. We tried and made an effort to resolve the effort. One proposal was to develop a cushion, to allow for a cushion so that if there were differences, we could try to cover them within a proposed cushion. That was objected to, not by the Democrats, but by the Republicans. We offered another proposal with regard to OMB offering some scorekeeping at the conference stage. The problem, very frankly, was that Members did not want to be in a position of having to negotiate with OMB throughout the committee process. That is a legitimate concern. So, in the last meeting of the budget summit in the Speaker's office, the decision was that what we need is a study by OMB and CBO to try and resolve their differences so that we can, in fact, have a legitimate score on the pay-as-you-go bills in which there is unity between OMB and CBO, as to those scores.

Now, with regard to the flexibility of the minority in administration. If they do not like what is being proposed in the bills, they could offer an amendment on the floor. It can be waived through the Committee on Rules. It can be negotiated in conference, and the President ultimately has the ability, as he has stated, to veto the bills. My urging here is that we request OMB and CBO to implement a study, to report back to the Congress on their differences. We will not pass any pay-as-you-go legislation until we complete the budgetary in any event. Therefore, please allow Members the time to complete that study, resolve these differences, so that we can focus on policy issues. That is where the debate ought to be.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given 2 additional minutes so that I can ask him a respectful question, as he pledged.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I object to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOYER). The question arises on the adoption.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to respond, as he pledged he would.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There has already been an objection to that.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I am renewing my personal request. I am asking unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes so that I may yield to the distinguished chairman, on questions that he made during the course of his presentation, questions that we challenged as being under dispute.

I would like to have a response, and therefore I ask unanimous consent for him to be permitted to respond.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would indicate that the previous question has been moved.

Will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] withhold on the motion, or does he press the motion?

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I withheld on the motion, and I would not object to a 2-minute unanimous-consent request, for purposes of a response from the chairman. At that point, I will renew my motion to move the previous question.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Speaker, and thank the gentleman for understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York request the additional unanimous consent for the 2 minutes?

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, yes, we do, so we can have a little colloquy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman, who has come before the Committee on Rules many times, that I deeply admire and respect him, and I do. However, the argument today is about the President of the United States, who called me on the phone at 6:30 a.m. on a Friday morning and told me that the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] and the Democratic leadership had agreed to have OMB as the relevant agency. That is why he agreed to the tax increase.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the President of the United States, the President of the United States was not present in the summit meetings. The President of the United States was not present during negotiations during this issue. There were three representatives from the administration who were present who are involved in this disputed issue. At the time, I said to them that if we could not resolve it here, make no mistake about it, this will be a disputed issue if we cannot resolve it. We could not resolve it. We made an effort to do that.

This is a way, very frankly, of trying to force the issue, so that hopefully OMB and CBO can reduce their differences on scoring. That solely the issue does not have anything to do with the budget agreement or pay as you go, or nothing to do with the enforcement. I intend that the agreement is fully enforced. I want to have an objective a scorekeeper as possible, and I prefer CBO over OMB. It is that simple.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, it says in the law that OMB would be the scorekeeper, and if that is established in the law, what is the purpose of this rule? Why the change, if it is not reneging upon an agreement? Why did we not proceed as we had proceeded before, except that it is a challenge?

Mr. PANETTA. The decision at the end of the final discussion on that was that indeed we would have a study by OMB and CBO to try to resolve their differences. That was the decision that we arrived at because these are great differences.

Now, to OMB's credit, they are trying to move toward more credible projections in terms of their costs.

□ 1520

I think all of us admit that OMB, whether it is a Democratic or a Republican administration, have played games with projections. They played games on economic projections. They played games on policy issues.

The CBO, on the other hand, remains the most objective scorekeeper for the House and the Senate. That is understood.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the President's communication may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOYER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The letter above referred to of December 21, 1990, from President Bush, is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 21, 1990.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I understand that the House Democratic Caucus has approved a rule for consideration by the House that would begin to undo the recently enacted Budget Agreement.

This rule would change the new pay-as-you-go enforcement mechanism by overturning a specifically negotiated and agreed scoring provision. More important, if the proposed rule is adopted, the House of Representatives will have begun the 102nd Congress by undercutting the credibility of the entire Budget Agreement. If specifically negotiated and agreed provisions are to be undone before the ink is dry, how can we expect the Agreement to be taken seriously? Where, one might reasonably ask, is the process of erosion to stop?

Abandonment of the Agreement would undermine hard-earned confidence in the U.S. Government's improved ability to control Federal spending. To undermine such confidence in the current economic circumstances seems to me to be particularly unwise.

In order to preserve the integrity of the Budget Agreement, I urge you to prevent the adoption of any rule that would violate our Agreement. And in order to preserve confidence in that Agreement, I must advise you that I will veto any bill that contains language such as that specified in the rule approved by the Democratic Caucus.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 250, nays 162, not voting 18, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOYER). Before the Chair takes the vote, if there are any Members who did not take the oath, if there are any Members who were absent when the oath was administered by the Speaker, the Speaker is prepared to give the oath before this vote is announced. Any Member who has not taken the oath, who wishes to take the oath now, will report to the well.

Mr. WEBER and Mr. SHUSTER changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. JONES of North Carolina changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the previous question was ordered.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MOTION TO COMMIT OFFERED BY MR. MICHEL

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to commit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to commit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MICHEL moves to commit the resolution H. Res. 5 to a select committee comprised of the Majority Leader and the Minority Leader with instructions to report back the same to the House forthwith with only the following amendments:

(1) Strike paragraph (10) and redesignate succeeding paragraphs accordingly.

(2) At the end of the resolution, add the following new paragraph:

"(19)(a) The Committee on the Judiciary is directed to report to the House not later than June 30, 1991, a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution to provide for a balanced budget for the United States Government.

"(b) Not later than ten legislative days after the Committee on Judiciary has reported a joint resolution pursuant to subparagraph (a), the Committee on Rules shall report a resolution providing for the consideration of such joint resolution in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union under an open amendment process. If the Committee on the Judiciary has not reported a joint resolution as required by the date specified in subparagraph (a), the Committee on Rules shall report not later than ten legislative days after such date a resolution providing for the consideration in the Committee of the Whole of the first joint resolution introduced in the 102nd Congress to amend the Constitution to provide for a balanced budget for the United States Government under an open amendment process.

"(c) If the Committee on Rules has not reported a resolution pursuant to subparagraph (b) by the date specified, it shall be in order for any Member, as a matter of highest privilege, on any day thereafter, to move that the House resolve into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the first joint resolution introduced in the 102nd Congress proposing an amendment to the Constitution to provide for a balanced budget for the United States Government, the joint resolution shall be subject to ten hours of general debate to be equally divided between the proponents and opponents of the joint resolution, and shall then be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule.".

Mr. MICHEL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to commit be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, but I will yield to the Republican leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] to explain what it is he is attempting to do.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, responding very briefly to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] under his reservation, my motion to commit would simply strike the CBO scoring directive and add a directive to the House Committee on the Judiciary to report to the House no later than June 30, 1991, a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced Federal budget. That is it in essence, and that is the motion to commit, and I urge my Members to support it.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois for his explanation.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to commit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 160, nays 256, not voting 14, as follows:

☐ 1622

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 5, the resolution just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GLICKMAN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, I represented the United States as an international observer during the second round of presidential elections in Guatemala on January 6. My plane was scheduled to depart and unfortunately, I missed votes on January 3. Had I been present, I would have voted "no" on rollcall 3, "yes" on rollcall 4, and "no" on rollcall 5.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN MINORITY EMPLOYEES

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 6) and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 6

Resolved, That pursuant to the Legislative Pay Act of 1929, as amended, the six minority employees authorized therein shall be the following named persons, effective January 3, 1991, until otherwise ordered by the House to-wit: William R. Pitts, Jr., Walter P. Kennedy, Ronald W. Lasch, Jay Pierson, William Gavin and Vicki Martyak, each to receive gross compensation pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 119, Ninety- fifth Congress, as enacted into permanent law by section 115 of Public Law 95-94.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 7) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 7

Resolved, That unless otherwise ordered, the hour of meeting of the House shall be 12 o'clock meridian on Mondays and Tuesdays; 2 o'clock post meridian on Wednesdays; 11 o'clock ante meridian on all other days of the week up to and including May 14, 1991; and that from May 15, 1991, until the end of the first session, the hour of daily meeting of the House shall be 12 o'clock meridian on Mondays and Tuesdays and 10 o'clock ante meridian on all other days of the week.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF THE ASSEMBLY OF THE CONGRESS

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed on the part of the House to join a like committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House has been assembled and is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make has performed that duty.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO CERTAIN STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 8) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 8

Resolved, That the following named Members, be and they are hereby, elected to the following standing committees of the House of Representatives:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

POLICIES OF THE CHAIR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair customarily takes this occasion on the opening day of a Congress to announce his policies with respect to particular aspects of the legislative process. The Chair will insert in the RECORD announcements by the Speaker concerning: First, privileges of the floor; second, introduction of bills and resolutions; third, requests for committees to sit during the 5-minute rule; fourth, unanimous consent requests for the consideration of bills and resolutions; fifth, recognition for 1-minute speeches and special orders; sixth, decorum in debate; seventh, conduct of votes by electronic device; eighth, jurisdictional concepts related to clause 5(b) of rule XXI; and ninth, appointment of conferees. These announcements where appropriate will indicate verbatim the origins of the stated policies and the dates thereof. The Speaker intends to continue the policies reflected in these statements in the 102d Congress.

1. Privileges of the Floor

The Speaker's announced instructions to the Doorkeeper and Sergeant at Arms in the 98th Congress on January 25, 1983, and in the 99th Congress on January 21, 1986, regarding strict enforcement of rule XXXII, specifying those persons having the privileges of the floor during sessions of the House, will be applied during the 102d Congress.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, JANUARY 25, 1983

The SPEAKER. Rule XXXII strictly limits those persons to whom the privileges of the floor during sessions of the House are extended, and that rule prohibits the Chair from entertaining requests for suspension or waiver of that rule. As reiterated as recently as August 22, 1974, by Speaker Albert under the principle stated in Deschler's Procedure, chapter 4, section 3.4, the rule strictly limits the number of committee staff permitted on the floor at one time during the consideration of measures reported from their committees. This permission does not extend to Members' personal staff except when a Member has an amendment actually pending during the 5-minute rule. To this end, the Chair requests all Members and committee staff to cooperate to assure that not more than the proper number of staff are on the floor, and then only during the actual consideration of measures reported from their committees. The Chair will again extend this admonition to all properly admitted majority and minority staff by insisting that their presence on the floor, including the areas behind the rail, be restricted to those periods during which their supervisors have specifically requested their presence. The Chair stated this policy in the 97th Congress, and an increasing number of Members have insisted on strict enforcement of the rule. The Chair has consulted with and has the concurrence of the Minority Leader with respect to this policy and has directed the Doorkeeper and the Sergeant at Arms to assure proper enforcement of the rule.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, JANUARY 21, 1986

The SPEAKER. Rule XXXII strictly limits those persons to whom the privileges of the floor during sessions of the House are extended, and that rule prohibits the Chair from entertaining request for suspension or waiver of that rule. As reiterated by the Chair on January 25, 1983, and January 3, 1985, and as stated in chapter 4, section 3.4 of Deschler-Brown's Procedure in the House of Representatives, the rule strictly limits the number of committee staff on the floor at one time during the consideration of measures reported from their committees. This permission does not extend to Members' personal staff except when a Member's amendment is actually pending during the 5-minute rule. It also does not extend to personal staff of Members who are sponsors of pending bills or who are engaging in special orders. The Chair requests the cooperation of all Members and committee staff to assure that only the proper number of staff are on the floor, and then only during the consideration of measures reported from their committees. The Chair is making this statement and reiterating this policy because of concerns expressed by many Members about the number of committee staff on the floor during the last weeks of the first session. The Chair requested each chairman, and each ranking minority member, to submit to the Doorkeeper a list of staff who are to be allowed on the floor during the consideration of a measure reported by their committee. Each staff person should exchange his or her ID for a "committee staff" badge which is to be worn while on the floor. The Chair has consulted with the Minority Leader and will continue to consult with him. The Chair has furthermore directed the Doorkeeper and the Sergeant at Arms to assure proper enforcement of Rule XXXII.

2. Introduction of Bills and Resolutions

The Speaker's statement in the 98th Congress on January 3, 1983, regarding the signing of bills and resolutions, his determination of committee jurisdiction on a joint or sequential basis, and his discretionary authority to refer nongermane Senate amendments to House bills to the committees of appropriate jurisdiction, will continue to apply in the 102d Congress.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, JANUARY 3, 1983

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to make a statement concerning the introduction and reference of bills and resolutions. As Members are aware, they have the privilege today of introducing bills. Heretofore on the opening day of a new Congress, several hundred bills have been introduced. The Chair will do his best to refer as many bills as possible, but he will ask the indulgence of Members if he is unable to refer all the bills that may be introduced. Those bills which are not referred and do not appear in the RECORD as of today will be included in the next day's RECORD and printed with a date as of today.

The Chair has advised all officers and employees of the House that are involved in the processing of bills that every bill, resolution, memorial, petition or other material that is placed in the hopper must bear the signature of a Member. Where a bill or resolution is jointly sponsored, the signature must be that of the Member first named thereon. The bill clerk is instructed to return to the Member any bill which appears in the hopper without an original signature. This procedure was inaugurated in the 92nd Congress. It has worked well, and the Chair thinks that it is essential to continue this practice to insure the integrity of the process by which legislation is introduced in the House. The Chair also desires to announce that pursuant to the authority granted him in Rule X, clause 5, he will continue the practice of making referral of bills and resolutions as indicated in the annotations under that clause contained in the House Rules and Manual.

3. Requests for Committees to Sit During the 5-Minute Rule

The Speaker's guidelines announced during the 98th Congress on March 3, 1983, regarding unanimous consent requests for committees to sit during the 5-minute rule will continue to apply during the 102d Congress.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, MARCH 3, 1983

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces that he will recognize Members to make requests for committees to sit during the 5-minute rule only at certain times during the legislative day. While the precedents indicate that such requests when pending are not votes requiring the presence of a quorum, the Chair wishes to avoid the need for a call of the House pending such requests but at the same time to assure predictability as to when he will accord recognition. Therefore, the Speaker intends to set up the following guidelines:

First, as has been established by precedent, permission to sit shall require unanimous consent if the permission pertains to a day for which the program has not been announced. Thus, prior to the announcement of the legislative program for the following week, only one objection would be required to prevent a committee from sitting. Following the announcement by the Majority Leader, or his designee, of the program for the next week, the Chair would entertain requests for committees to sit during the following week and 10 objections would then be required. The Chair wants it to be clearly understood that the first available opportunity in the House following the announcement of the program is an appropriate time for considering requests pertaining to the following week if the announcement comes before the completion of all legislative business.

Second, the Chair will not entertain requests on days when all votes on legislative matters have been posponed to a later date; however, the Chair will accept requests for committee hearings to be held later in the week if the request has the concurrence of the ranking minority member of the committee or subcommittee.

Third, on days when legislative business is to be conducted, and when rollcall votes are in order on legislation, the Chair will recognize during the 1-minute period only when he is assured that the ranking minority member of the committee or subcommittee involved supports the requests for the hearings or meetings.

Requests that have been objected to by 10 or more Members pursuant to clause 2(i) of Rule XI may not be renewed on the same day unless the Chair is assured that the objections have been withdrawn. The Chair will in no instance entertain requests after the legislative business of the day has been concluded; that is, after leaves of absence have been laid down or unanimous consent requests from the majority and minority tables have been entertained at the end of the day.

4. Unanimous-Consent Requests for the Consideration of Bills and Resolutions

The Speaker's policy with respect to recognition for unanimous-consent requests for the consideration of unreported bills and resolutions and for the consideration of House bills with Senate amendments, as initially announced in the 98th Congress on January 25 and April 26, 1984, will apply during the 102d Congress.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, JANUARY 25, 1984

The SPEAKER. As indicated [in section 757] of the House Rules and Manual, the Chair has established a policy of conferring recognition upon Members to permit consideration of bills and resolutions by unanimous consent only when assured that the majority and minority floor leadership and committee and subcommittee chairmen and ranking minority members have no objection. Consistent with that policy, and with the Chair's inherent power of recognition under clause 2, Rule XIV, the Chair, and any occupant of the Chair appointed as Speaker pro tempore pursuant to clause 7, Rule I, will decline recognition for unanimous consent requests for consideration of bills and resolutions without assurances that the request has been cleared by that leadership. This denial of recognition by the Chair will not reflect necessarily any personal opposition on the part of the Chair to orderly consideration of the matter in question, but will reflect the determination upon the part of the chair that orderly procedures will be followed; that is, procedures involving consultation and agreement between floor and committee leadership on both sides of the aisle.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, APRIL 26, 1984

The SPEAKER. With respect to unanimous consent requests to dispose of Senate amendments to House bills on the Speaker's table, the Chair will entertain such a request only if made by the chairman of the committee with jurisdiction, or by another committee member authorized to make the request.

5. Recognition for 1-Minute Speeches and Special Orders

The Speaker's statement in the 98th Congress on January 25, 1984 with respect to the Speaker's policy for recognition for 1-minute speeches and special orders, alternating between both sides of the aisle, announced on August 8, 1984, and implemented on September 5, 1984, will apply during the 102d Congress.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER, AUGUST 8, 1984

The SPEAKER. After consultation with and concurrence by the Minority Leader, the Chair announces that he will institute a new policy of recognition for "1-minute" speeches and for special order requests. The Chair will alternate recognition for 1-minute speeches between majority and minority Members, in the order in which they seek recognition in the well under present practice from the Chair's right to the Chair's left, with possible exceptions for Members of the leadership and Members having business requests. The Chair, of course, reserves the right to limit 1-minute speeches to a certain period of time or to a special place in the program on any given day, with notice to the leadership.

With respect to recognition for "special order speeches" at the end of legislative business of the day, the Chair will recognize first those Members who wish to address the House for 5 minutes or less, alternating between majority and minority Members, otherwise in the order in which those permissions were granted in the House. Thereafter, the Chair will recognize those Members who wish to address the House for longer than 5 minutes up to 1 hour, alternating between majority and minority Members in the order in which those permissions were granted by the House.

Thus, all Members can continue to obtain permissions to address the House in the same ways as are presently utilized, either by requests made by the acting majority and minority leaders at the end of the day through their respective Cloakrooms or by individual requests agreed to on the floor for that day or for a future day. For the request to be entertained, it should state "permission to address the House at the conclusion of legislative business, consistent with the Speaker's announced policy of recognition." Thus, Members should be on notice that a special order for more than 5 minutes, although agreed to at a prior time, may be preceded by a series of special orders of 5 minutes of less, or by a longer special order of a Member of the other party.

Further refinements of this policy based upon experience may be announced by the Chair in the future after consultation with the Minority Leader.

6. Decorum in Debate

It is essential that the dignity of the proceedings of the House be preserved, not only to assure that the House conducts its business in an orderly fashion but to permit Members to properly comprehend and participate in the business of the House. To this end, and in order to permit the Chair to understand and to correctly put the question on the numerous requests that are made by Members, the Chair requests that Members and others who have the privileges of the floor desist from audible conversation in the Chamber while the business of the House is being conducted. The Chair would encourage all Members to review rule XIV to gain a better understanding of the proper rules of decorum expected of them, and especially: First, to avoid personalities in debate with respect to references to other Members, the Senate, and the President; second, to address the Chair while standing and only when and not beyond the time recognized, and not to address the television or other imagined audience; third, to refrain from passing between the Chair and the Member speaking, or directly in front of a Member speaking from the well; fourth, to refrain from smoking in the Chamber; and generally to display the same degree of respect to the Chair and other Members that every Member is due.

7. Conduct of Votes by Electronic Device

As Members are aware, clause 5 of rule XV provides that "Members shall have not less than 15 minutes from the ordering of the rollcall or quorum call to have their vote or presence recorded."

While the rule obviously states a minimum, rather than maximum, time requirement for electronic votes, and while no occupant of the chair would attempt to prevent a Member who is in the Chamber at the expiration of that time from casting his or her vote, the Chair has noticed that in the past session inordinate delays in concluding electronic votes or quorum calls would occur when Members would notify the Chair through the Cloakrooms that they were on their way to the Chamber from a variety of locations.

The Chair would encourage all Members to depart for the Chamber promptly upon the appropriate bell and light signal, since there is no guarantee that Members can rely upon telephoned notice to the Cloakrooms in order to have votes held open. As indicated by his remarks on this subject on October 13, 1990, the minority leader joins the Chair in urging all Members to help avoid the unnecessary loss of time in conducting the business of the House.

8. Jurisdictional Concepts Related to Clause 5(b) of Rule XXI

Clause 5(b) of rule XXI prohibits the reporting of a tax or tariff matter by any committee not having that jurisdiction. Most of the questions of order arising under this clause since its adoption in 1983 have related to provisions that clearly affected the operation of the Internal Revenue Code or the customs laws. From time to time, however, such a question has related to a provision drafted as a user or regulatory fee levied on members of a class that occasions or avails itself of a particular governmental activity, typically to generate revenue in support of that activity.

In order to provide guidance concerning the referral of bills, to assist committees in staying within their appropriate jurisdictions under rule X, to assist committees without jurisdiction over tax or tariff measures in complying with clause 5(b) of rule XXI, and to protect the constitutional prerogative of the House to originate revenue bills, the Speaker will make the following statement:

Standing committees of the House (other than the Committees on Appropriations and Budget) have jurisdiction to consider user, regulatory and other fees, charges, and assessments levied on a class directly availing itself of, or directly subject to, a governmental service, program, or activity, but not on the general public, as measures to be utilized solely to support, subject to annual appropriations, the service, program, or activity (including agency functions associated therewith) for which such fees, charges, and assessments are established and collected and not to finance the costs of Government generally. The fee must be paid by a class benefiting from the service, program or activity, or being regulated by the agency; in short, there must be a reasonable connection between the payors and the agency or function receiving the fee. The fund that receives the amounts collected is not itself determinative of the existence of a fee or a tax. The Committee on Ways and Means has jurisdiction over "revenue measures generally" under rule X. That committee is entitled to an appropriate referral of broad-based fees and could choose to recast such fees as excise taxes. A provision only reauthorizing or amending an existing fee without fundamental change, or creating a new fee generating only a de minimis aggregate amount of revenues, does not necessarily require a sequential referral to the Committee on Ways and Means. The Chair intends to coordinate these principles with the Committee on the Budget and the Congressional Budget Office, especially in the reconciliation process, so that budget scorekeeping does not determine, and reconciliation directives and their implementation will not be inconsistent with, committee jurisdiction.

Further, it should be emphasized that the constitutional prerogative of the House to originate revenue measures will continue to be viewed broadly to include any meaningful revenue proposal that the Senate may attempt to originate.

9. Appointment of Conferees

Consistent with clause 6 of rule X, the Chair intends to develop and implement a policy that would enable him to the fullest extent feasible to simplify the appointment of conferees.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

House of Representatives,
Washington, DC, January 3, 1991.

Hon. Thomas S. Foley,
The Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

Dear Mr. Speaker: Under Clause 4 of Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, I herewith designate Mr. W. Raymond Colley, Deputy Clerk, to sign any and all papers and do all other acts for me under the name of the Clerk of the House which he would be authorized to do by virtue of this designation, except such as are provided by statute, in case of my temporary absence of disability.

If Mr. Colley should not be able to act in my behalf for any reason, then Ms. Dolores C. Snow, Assistant to the Clerk, or Mr. Dallas L. Dendy, Jr., Assistant to the Clerk, should similarly perform such duties under the same conditions as are authorized by this designation.

These designations shall remain in effect for the 102nd Congress or until modified by me.

With great respect, I am
Sincerely yours,
Donnald K. Anderson,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

ADJOURNMENT FROM THURSDAY, JANUARY 3, 1991, TO MONDAY, JANUARY 7, 1991, AND SUNDRY MEETING DATES AND TIMES THROUGH WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 23, 1991

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at noon on Monday next; that when the House adjourns on Monday, January 7, 1991, it adjourn to meet at noon on Wednesday, January 9, 1991; that when the House adjourns on Wednesday, January 9, it adjourn to meet at noon on Friday, January 11; that when the House adjourns on Friday, January 11, it adjourn to meet at noon on Monday, January 14; that when the House adjourns on Monday, January 14, it adjourn to meet at noon on Wednesday, January 16; that when the House adjourns on Wednesday, January 16, it adjourn to meet at noon on Friday, January 18; that when the House adjourns on Friday, January 18, it adjourn to meet at noon on Tuesday, January 22; and that when the House adjourns on Tuesday, January 22, it adjourn to meet at noon on Wednesday, January 23.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION REGARDING IRAQ

(Mr. BENNETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, today, Dick Durbin and I introduced a resolution which praises the diplomatic and economic leadership by the President in dealing with the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait. Our resolution, relying on the Constitution, also requires action by Congress before any offensive military action is initiated against Iraq.

The question of whether to go to war is such a grave decision, it is not a decision to be left to one man. Our Constitution wisely makes this the responsibility of Congress, not the President. In 1798, James Madison, considered by many to be the father of our Constitution, wrote to Thomas Jefferson:

> The Constitution supposes, what the history of all governments demonstrates, that the executive is the branch of power most interested in war, and most prone to it. [The Constitution] has accordingly, with studied care, vested the question of war in the legislature.

Madison warned that if the President, > * * * obliges the legislature to declare war contrary to its judgment, and * * * imposes a like moral obligation, to grant the requisite supplies * * * it is evident that the people are cheated out of the best ingredients in their government, the safeguards of peace which is the greatest of their blessings.

Unlike the budget, Social Security, or any of the other issues confronting our country, the question of war is an issue of life or death. It is too critical a decision to be made by the President alone; the people, through Congress, must be heard.

In our zeal to uphold international law, we should not trample upon the supreme law of our land, the U.S. Constitution.

Dick and I are joined by the following Members in sponsoring this resolution: Frank Annunzio, George Miller, Edward Roybal, Pete Stark, Charles Schumer, Edolphus Towns, Barbara Boxer, Robert Mrazek, George Sangmeister, Lane Evans, Rick Boucher, George Hochbrueckner, Matthew McHugh, Louise Slaughter, Jolene Unsoeld, Bob Traxler, Ronald Dellums, Bernie Sanders, Jerry Costello, Romano Mazzoli, Charles Rangel, Sidney Yates, Gerald Kleczka, David Nagle, Martin Olav Sabo, Sam Gejdenson, Marcy Kaptur, Morris Udall, Chester Atkins, Henry Waxman, Leon Panetta, Kweisi Mfume, Peter Kostmayer, Glenn Poshard, John Lewis, and Howard Wolpe.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind the audience that they should refrain from expressing any positive or negative expressions regarding the conduct of Members here on the floor of the House.

NO MORE BUDGET SUMMITS

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, it is sad but necessary for Members, at the beginning of this new Congress, to reflect a little on where we are, on the increase in the national debt that is projected.

To do that, I want to draw the Members' attention to what was the projected deficit in January of 1990 for fiscal year 1991: $130 billion; 2 months later, CBO, the same agency, estimating the deficit projection, was $161 billion; 4 months later, July, CBO said the deficit for 1991 would be $232 billion; and then, in December, at the close of the year, the same agency, CBO, said the deficit would be $253 billion.

What is the increase in the national debt projected for this fiscal year; $399 billion? This place is out of control. The people that estimate figures have no idea of what is going on. What does it tell Members? We have to stop the idea that somehow budget summitry is going to solve our problems. We have to get rid of the idea that we can tax ourselves out of this mess. The only thing that can solve this is the Congress that has the guts to restrain the growth in spending by limiting spending increases in appropriation bills to no more than the rate of inflation, over what was spent in the preceding year.

Never, ever again will we have budget summits.

THREE MAJOR ISSUES NOW BEFORE CONGRESS

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, the first day of the session is always very eventful. We have a chance to see our friends and greet the newcomers. This has been an eventful day. However, even beyond the human relations, this is an eventful day for me because I put my name on three major bills that I think could, if passed, and really change this country and our world.

One is the resolution referred to a moment ago by my friend from Florida, Mr. Bennett, which has to do with the power of the Congress to make war, and not the President alone. I think that is a very fundamental issue which must be dealt with in this Congress. I salute the Speaker for keeping Members in session through January and not allowing Members to be in recess.

The second bill is the Brady bill, which is a 7-day delay or waiting period before a handgun can be transferred. This, I think, would overcome much of the violence and many of the deaths we have seen thoughout our Nation, and certainly here in the District of Columbia.

The last bill perhaps is more fundamental than anything, and that is campaign reform, to change the very system by which we Members come to Congress to change a system which many of the people in America feel has been corrupted.

I think, Mr. Speaker, if we the Congress were to deal with these issues, I think we would have an absolutely sensational Congress.

Let me take this opportunity to wish all of our colleagues much health and happiness in this new year.

SECRETARY LUJAN REPRESENTS AMERICANS

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate our former colleague, Secretary of the Interior Manuel Lujan, for representing the American people in the Matsushita's ownership of the concessions at Yosemite National Park.

Secretary Lujan is not coercing nor intimidating Matsushita as former Senate majority leader Howard Baker and former U.S. Trade Representative Robert Strauss claim. He expresses the sentiments of the American people, not those of Japan's shadow warriors who are hired guns for Matsushita as both Senator Baker and Bob Strauss are.

We live in America where we have freedom of speech, and not intimidation by the yen or the almighty dollar—or what the Washington Post calls an "elite corp of middlemen." We can still fight city hall. Secretary Lujan is a true public servant and is serving the best interests of the American people. That is something the hired guns of the Japanese have forgotten.

We need more people like Secretary Lujan to keep this country from being rolled over by the special interests of former Government officials who sell our future for a yen.

SUPPORT THE PRESIDENT ON THE PERSIAN GULF

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, there are those who would criticize the President of the United States for acting too hastily on the question of the Persian Gulf; yet if you look at the record you will see that this President consulted worldwide with multiple numbers of nations and leaders before taking one step in the Persian Gulf. He presented through his proper representatives resolutions in the United Nations and waited for 12 of them en seriatim to be considered and passed before taking the next vital step in the resolution of that crisis, and January 15 was set as a deadline for the removal of the Iraqi forces in Kuwait by the United Nations, not by the President. He has acted with calm and with dispatch and with restraint throughout this whole period.

I will support the President of the United States as a Member of Congress in the execution of American foreign policy, and if a resolution should be presented to the Congress to support the President in his efforts, I shall do that; but one thing we cannot do is to unilaterally withdraw from the President the power of congressional opinion and the power of American public opinion while he is negotiating in these stages of the policy in the Persian Gulf.

Let us stand with and rally around the President of the United States.

SUPPORT COLA INCREASE FOR VETERANS

(Mr. BILIRAKIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, although the last congress we provided cost-of-living increases to our Federal retirees and Social Security recipients—we failed to grant a similar increase in VA disability payments. We failed to provide undiminished support to our Nation's veterans at a time when we were asking a new generation of servicemen to heed their country's call in the Persian Gulf.

This situation is nothing short of abominable and cannot be permitted to continue. How can we ask our citizens to serve their country now when we fail to deliver on our past promises?

How can we ask our countrymen to put their lives on the line when we effectively reduce support to those who are disabled in service to their Nation?

My own Veterans' Affairs Committee and the full House supported the COLA increase last year and it is the intention of the Veterans' Committee to act swiftly on this matter this year. But the matter remains unresolved today and every day until we act.

Mr. Speaker, let us send a clear message to all our veterans and to all our servicemen. Let us act quickly on this matter. Let us signify that our country places their sacrifice above all else.

FMLN MURDERED U.S. SOLDIERS

(Mr. SHUSTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, we have just received some very sobering intelligence from El Salvador where yesterday a United States Army helicopter was reported shot down. That U.S. Army helicopter, Mr. Speaker, was not shot down, as claimed by the FMLN. It landed under control. The three American soldiers in it were not found dead, but rather they were murdered, with bullets in the backs of their heads.

This was a clearly marked U.S. Army helicopter with three American soldiers in it in U.S. Army uniforms. They were flying an administrative support mission for our Ambassador in El Salvador. They had no role whatsoever in support of the Salvadoran Armed Forces.

It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that this atrocity will give second thoughts to those Americans who are giving aid and comfort and financial support to the FMLN Communist guerrillas in El Salvador. It is my hope that more Americans will begin to see these FMLN Communist guerrillas for the brutal killers that they are.

INTRODUCTION OF WETLANDS PROTECTION AND REGULATORY REFORM ACT OF 1991

(Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Wetlands Protection and Regulatory Reform Act of 1991. This comprehensive legislation revises the Clean Water Act's controversial section 404 wetlands permitting program. It offers a more balanced approach to identifying and regulating true wetlands, achieving a no overall net loss of wetlands goal, providing greater deference to State and local decisionmakers, and affording greater protections to private property owners. In addition, it would prohibit the Corps of Engineers from implementing major increases proposed in the fees for their regulatory program.

This bill embodies the growing public sentiment that the Nation's wetland laws need serious revision. This is particularly true for farmers and other private property owners, as well as local elected officials who are often prevented from pursuing important public works projects because of conflicting or intrusive regulations.

My bill reflects the views of those who value wetlands but recognize not all wetlands are created equally. The legislation should appeal to those who believe Federal regulations need to provide a more predictable, streamlined permitting process that respects private property rights and avoids unnecessary intrusions into land use and other matters involving State and local decisionmaking.

In addition, my bill sends the clear signal that increased education and incentives for private stewardship are preferable to heavy-handed regulations or counterproductive finger pointing at particular groups.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and to get involved in the ongoing wetlands policy debate. With enough support from my colleagues, I hope to move this bill and the concepts embodied in it as part of the upcoming debate on Clean Water Act reauthorization or possibly as separate legislation. Either way, the need for wetlands protection and regulatory reform is too great to settle for continuing the status quo.

The time for action is now. My bill will help to provide the needed congressional guidance to get the section 404 program back on track and on the path toward a reasonable, national goal of no overall net loss.

It is my hope that this bill will help to continue the dialog on regulatory reform and, at the same time, promote some of the consensus recommendations by those who want a stronger, fairer, and more effective wetlands protection program.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the Wetlands Protection and Regulatory Reform Act of 1991.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL PROVIDING FOR DISABLED VETERANS

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a bill to ensure that the veterans of our country who were disabled in combat are well provided for this year and every year to come.

It is a disgrace that the service-connected, disabled veterans did not receive a cost-of-living adjustment for the 1991 fiscal year. Also, it is ironic that Congress would not help disabled veterans at this time, when you realize the sacrifices that many American men and women may have to make as a result of the Middle East conflict.

Mr. Speaker, my bill gives disabled veterans a cost-of-living increase in their disability compensation as of January 1, 1991. In addition, it includes a provision that will make this COLA automatic every year. Under my legislation, any time Social Security benefits are increased, disabled veterans' compensation rates will be increased by the same percentage.

By making this COLA automatic, we will insure that the service-connected disabled veterans are never again overlooked, as they were last session. We will ensure that those who served our country so well and were injured in the line of duty are justly compensated. Also, we will insure that disabled veterans will not be subject to the political whims of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to give the disabled veterans of this country the compensation that they deserve and to cosponsor this important legislation.

EQUITY FOR DISABLED VETERANS

(Mr. JAMES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate Congressman STEARNS for his comments on COLA's.

It is imperative that we do equity when it concerns the veterans, as it is imperative that we do so for all elements of our society.

It was my understanding that regardless of the budget process that they were to receive their COLA's. Somehow it did not happen. It should have happened, and if it was not anticipated, it should have been. There must be COLA's for the disabled veterans. We do that for other elements of our society. We must do it for our veterans, the ones who served our country in time of need. Especially now we must act quickly to assure veterans that they will be treated fairly. We do it on Social Security. We do it with other benefits. Indeed, we have done it with our own salaries. Certainly we must do it for the disabled veterans.

THE ECONOMIC CRISIS

(Mr. ROHRABACHER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, late last year the liberal Democrats who control this body forced a budget down the throats of the American people; telling us it was just the medicine that the American economy needed. Many of us objected, and as our economy gets sicker and sicker the American people will remember who prescribed the second biggest tax hike in American history at a time when our economy was weak and faltering.

Well, the big spenders and the big taxers boxed in the President of the United States with their budget summit agreements and they pushed through this massive tax increase in the name of deficit reduction.

Now every day as the economic news comes in, as the economic calamity becomes ever more clear, and as our people are thrown out of work, they will know who is to blame.

The tax increase they foisted on us did not bring down the deficit 1 cent. It was a tax increase and not a deficit reduction, and now we are paying the price. The American people are being taxed out of their jobs and taxed out of the prosperity they have earned through their hard work.

☐ 1650

I say there will be no more budget summit agreements like this; never again will we agree to this. The American people will know who to blame for the economic crisis we face.

NO MORE BUDGETRY BY SUMMIT

(Mr. DELAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, the budget process is one of our major responsibilities and we ought not leave it to a handful of people negotiating behind the scene. Never again should we allow this to happen, Mr. Speaker. No more budgetry by summit.

When we allow the normal budget process to be usurped by a handful of negotiators working behind closed doors, the rest of us are not able to affect that process. Instead, it is presented to us as a fait accompli—a done deal that we are discouraged from changing in any way. The negotiators tell us that the agreement is bipartisan—that represents a negotiated compromise on all sides and any change will upset the delicate balance that holds the agreement together. Somehow the agreement takes on a life of its own and we are left out in the cold, so to speak.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that this way of legislating is completely irresponsible. It means that the constituents who elected us to represent them really have no voice in the process. It means that most of us—their representatives—are left out of crucial steps in the process. It means that the minority was subtly discouraged from promoting its own goals and ideals.

Mr. Speaker, what's wrong with taking the time with doing it right—especially with something this important? There should be no more budgeting by summit. Never again.

CONCERN ABOUT FORMER TOP U.S. GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS REPRESENTING FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS AND CORPORATE INTERESTS

(Mr. WOLF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, what is happening to this country? Today I read in the Washington Post that a former Senate majority leader and a former Democratic Party chairman have teamed up to accuse the Secretary of the Interior of intimidation and coercion because he wants a Japanese company—Matsushita—to donate tourist facilities at Yosemite National Park to the United States.

Across the country there has been growing concern about foreign investment, including the MCA purchase. There has been even greater concern regarding former top U.S. Government officials who represent foreign governments and corporate interests.

People are beginning to feel that what may have been acceptable when the United States was the unchallenged leader in trade and manufacturing may not be acceptable today.

And Secretary Lujan's concerns about Matsushita's ownership of the national park concessions seem to be supported by an article published in the Japanese Economic Journal on June 23, 1990. The article is about Japanese electronics companies under investigation by the IRS for substantially underreporting their United States income. It cites Matsushita sources as saying that its U.S. subsidiary, Matsushita Marketing of America, may owe over $74 million in U.S. taxes that it failed to pay. That is not a good track record for a company that could have a monopoly in a U.S. national park.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of Americans who are beginning to be concerned that high-level Government officials, former high-level officials have gone from serving their country to selling their country.

The article referred to follows:

[From the Japan Economic Journal, June 23, 1990]

U.S. UNITS HIT WITH TAX BILLS OF YEN 50 BILLION

The U.S. Internal Revenue Service has determined that three Japanese electronics companies' U.S. units have failed to pay proper corporate taxes and owe taxes totaling more than Yen 50 billion, because they failed to report income from their international deals, company sources said June 14.

The U.S. is applying a strict taxation assessment method on foreign companies operating in the U.S. Units of Hitachi Ltd., Toshiba Corp. and Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. illicitly transferred profits into their affiliated companies abroad in the early 1980s, according to the IRS.

If the companies pay the taxes, Japan's National Tax Administration Agency would refund a corresponding amount of corporate tax to the parent companies to avoid double taxation, observers in Tokyo said.

However, since it would involve the transfer of a large amount of tax revenues, the issue will likely entail consultations between the tax authorities of the two countries, the observes said.

According to Hitachi sources, the company's U.S. subsidiaries have been ordered by the IRS to pay more than Yen 10 billion in taxes for failure to report revenues in the early 1980s. The sources also said U.S. marketing units of other Hitachi group companies, including Hitachi Metals Ltd., Hitachi Chemical Co. and Nissei Sangyo Co. also owe taxes.

Toshiba sources said that the IRS has informed production and sales subsidiaries of Toshiba America Inc., a holding company, that payments of some Yen 50 billion are owed. The company allegedly failed to declare some revenues in the four years ended March 1983.

Matsushita sources said its U.S. marketing subsidiary, Matsushita Electric Corp. of America, owes taxes of almost Yen 10 billion.

Japanese company sources indicated that U.S. sales subsidiaries of other Japanese electronics firms and automakers are being audited for inaccuracies.

Sony Corp. has been asked to submit some financial documents stored at its Tokyo headquarters, company officials said.

The U.S. tax system aims at levying taxes on a corporation's revenues from its international deals with overseas affiliates, the observers said. Under the system, tax is imposed if a company, whether foreign or American, transfers profits in some illegitimate way, such as by manipulating export prices and royalty incomes.

In obtaining proper taxable incomes of a particular company, the IRS bases its calculations on reasonable prices, rather than prices provided by the company. Because the notion of reasonable prices is not clearly defined, the three Japanese companies involved are contesting the differences between figures they provided and what the IRS has determined as reasonable prices.

OIL IMPORT TAX

(Mr. CONTE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, when I think of an oil import tax, I think of the greedy and the needy.

An oil import tax is simply a way for big oil to punish the American people with higher oil prices.

Though there is currently no shortage of oil, and though the Department of Energy has said that the lost Iraqi and Kuwaiti reserves will be offset fully through at least June 1991, the price of oil has remained high. And that is greedy.

And the American consumer, in this time of fiscal belt-tightening, is becoming more and more needy through no fault of their own. Big oil has already milked the average home heating oil consumer to the tune of an extra $25 a month. And an oil import tax would add an extra $5 per barrel fee on top of already high prices.

And to add inequity to injury, Mr. Speaker, the poor and fixed-income Americans who spend the greatest percentage of their income on heating oil and gasoline would be hurt most by another increase in the price of oil.

But you don't only have to be mad, you can also get even. I have offered a resolution which would send a message to the greedy oil barons that says, "we don't want a tax on oil which will hurt the American consumer further."

Let's represent the needy and not the greedy. Cosponsor my resolution.

ENFORCEMENT MECHANISMS REMOVED FROM BUDGET AGREEMENT

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, there will not be much said on television tonight about something very significant which happened in this Chamber today, but it should be covered. There was an agreement made when we passed the budget this last year that increased taxes on the people of this country by $165 billion, there was an agreement made that we would have a pay-as-you-go provision in there that would cut spending in the future and control spending.

Today when we passed the rules in this body that provision was taken out. It was thrown out the window by the majority on a party line vote.

What that means is that increases in spending in this session of the 102d Congress is going to go up and up and up.

The gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] pointed out to all of the Members of this body a few moments ago that the increase in public debt this year is going to be almost $400 billion, much more than we had estimated; $400 billion.

We raised taxes $165 billion on the backs of the American people and that was supposed to get the job done. The problem is we have taken all the enforcement mechanisms out today. The Democrat majority is responsible for that. We should hold them accountable, the American people should hold them accountable for breaking their word. They tied the President's hands in the budget agreement, they made him raise taxes $165 billion in order to get this enforcement mechanism put in there, and now they have taken it out. I think it is a shame.

RELEASE THE HIGHWAY TRUST FUNDS AND PREVENTION OF GOVERNMENT SHUTDOWNS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ABERCROMBIE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on two subjects about which I feel very strongly and which I would like the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to reflect my avenue of this special order.

Mr. Speaker, if indeed the economy is in a downturn, if indeed we are in the midst of a building recession, then the Congress of the United States must take some action in order to deaden the possibilities of a full-blown recession, to stop it in its tracks, as it were. I propose that we begin to contemplate, and I will introduce legislation to do so, the release of the highway trust funds from where they are now bottled up in a place where they cannot be used for anything except to be counted toward deficit reduction. Well, that now turns out to be almost a useless exercise because the deficit has grown so out of whack that leaving the highway trust funds unused in purposes for which they were intended does not help the deficit and prevents the good benefit of their use as originally intended.

Now what will the big spenders in Congress do, or intend to do, or propose to do when they see unemployment steadily rising? They will propose a massive new spending program of a job program, to create new make-work jobs in order to thwart the rising tide of unemployment. Well, I reject that. Rather we should, if we are going to do anything, put to work those dollars which the taxpayers of the Nation have already dedicated to infrastructure and highway construction, namely the money that they paid at the gas tank which we have kept in reserve and held unused contrary to the taxpayers' intent. I say, "Let's keep faith with the taxpayers and stop the recession dead in its tracks all in one fell swoop, by releasing the funds from the highway trust fund for their original intended purpose."

What will that do? That will create thousands of new jobs immediately, just at a time when the big spenders will say that unemployment is rising to unacceptable levels. If we intend that money now for highway construction, for bridge repair, moneys that the taxpayers have already said, "Go ahead and use for these purposes," then we are succeeding in abiding by their wishes and rebuilding our infrastructure all at one time.

What better way to go than to create a jobs program of Government jobs, Government-created jobs, where we can use this money to put into the private sector, in a system already in place, ready and willing to accept the Congress's go-ahead to rebuild our infrastructure? What a wonderful way to stop the recession.

And what if we are wrong, that there is no recession? We still will be rebuilding our bridges and our highway system.

I believe that even the President of the United States who has said that he will not countenance any new spending program or jobs program, no new spending, with which I agree, this is old spending in reserve which the taxpayers of the Nation have entrusted us to spend for highway and bridge construction. I say, "Let's do it now."

The other issue on which I wish to briefly comment is the fiasco of the budget resolution of this last fall, the one that everyone, with which everyone, has been left with a sour taste in his mouth. The Government of the United States actually shut down during that process while our Armed Forces were in Saudi Arabia prepared to fight for the resolution of that Persian Gulf crisis.

I ask, "Can you imagine the Government of the United States shutting down while our Armed Forces are deployed in the Persian Gulf?"

We must never allow the shutdown of Government again, nor the threat of shutdown. We must enter into our procedure a technology by which, if on September 30 of the fiscal year no budget has been arrived at by the Congress of the United States, that automatically the next day the previous year's budget is put into place. That way we will have no stoppage of Government employees, no furloughs, no shutdown of agencies, no shutdown of the Government. We will eliminate for all time that scary picture of the Federal Government of the United States going out of existence in the middle of a calendar year.

Mr. Speaker, I will be introducing legislation again to try to implement that proposal. It was sad to note today that a meager attempt to amend the House rules through the rules resolution that would be offered by the Republicans was shut down by the Democratic majority where we could have taken steps never to allow the Government of the United States to shut down again.

THE DESERT SHIELD BURDEN SHARING ACT OF 1991

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, almost 4 months after introducing legislation to secure reasonable contributions from other nations with a vital interest in Operation Desert Shield, I feel compelled to call the attention of my colleagues once more to the inadequate response of some nations to provide resources critical to the success of this multinational effort.

I commend to your attention an article in the December 19, 1990, edition of the New York Times by my Senate colleague JIM SASSER, which makes note of the fact that as of November 30, 1990, Japan had deposited only 10 percent of a meager $4 billion contribution. This is just one example of how some of our trading partners have chosen to sit on the sidelines while the United States risks the lives of the members of its Armed Forces to protect global security and a fragile world economy.

Therefore, I am reintroducing the Desert Shield Burden Sharing Act, which would impose an additional 20-percent ad valorem duty on the goods of any country the President decides is not contributing a commensurate share of resources to defending vital international interests. This bill sends a clear and unequivocal message to our allies that the Congress is prepared to provide the President with the necessary tools to ensure that the costs of Operation Desert Shield will not be borne by only a few countries.

I, along with the American people, remain outraged by the inaction of nations who continue to sit on the fence. The burden should be shared, and those who should share it must respond now.

I am submitting the text of this bill as well as Senator SASSER's article for the benefit of my colleagues.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Desert Shield Burden-Sharing Act of 1991".

SEC. 2 DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act:

(1) The term "commensurate contribution" means, in the case of a foreign country, that—

(A) such country is making a contribution to the multinational military mobilization and operations referred to in section 3; and

(B) such contribution is commensurate with—

(i) the extent of the economic benefit accruing to such country as a result of the securing of supplies of Persian Gulf area petroleum through such military mobilization and operations, and

(ii) the ability of such country to contribute, taking into account (in addition to such other factors as the President considers relevant) the financial and economic capabilities of the country and the balance of trade of such country with the United States.

(2) The term "entered" means entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, in the customs territory of the United States.

(3) The term "foreign country" does not include any country that—

(A) is party to a free trade area agreement with the United States;

(B) is a beneficiary developing country under title V of the Trade Act of 1974 (relating to a generalized system of preferences); or

(C) is a beneficiary country under the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act.

SEC. 3. PRESIDENTIAL DETERMINATIONS REGARDING MULTINATIONAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE MILITARY MOBILIZATION AND OPERATIONS AGAINST IRAQI AGGRESION.

Within 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall determine whether each foreign country is making a commensurate contribution to the multinational military mobilization and operations being carried out in and around the Arabian Peninsula in response to the invasion of Kuwait by the armed forces of Iraq on August 2, 1990.

SEC. 4. ADDITIONAL DUTIES ON PRODUCTS OF COUNTRIES DETERMINED NOT TO BE MAKING COMMENSURATE CONTRIBUTIONS.

(a) IMPOSITION OF ADDITIONAL DUTIES.—Subject to subection (b), the President shall, with respect to any foreign country that is determined under section 3 not to be making a commensurate contribution to the multinational military mobilization and operations referred to in such section—

(1) apply to all of the dutiable products of that country an additional duty at the rate of 20 percent ad valorem or the specific rate equivalent; and

(2) apply to all duty-free products of that country a duty of 20 percent ad valorem.

(b) SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—(1) The duties imposed under subsection (a) (1) and (2) on the products of a foreign country apply with respect to articles entered on or after the 30th day after the date on which the determination under section 3 regarding such country is made.

(2) Duties may not be applied under subsection (a) (1) or (2) on—

(A) articles that are duty-free; and

(B) the value of articles or contents of United States origin that are exempt from duty;

under chapter 98 of the Tariff Schedule of the United States.

(c) TERMINATION OF ADDITIONAL DUTIES.—The duties imposed under subsection (a) (1) and (2) on the products of any foreign country shall cease to apply effective with respect to articles entered on or after the date on which—

(1) the President determines that such country is making a commensurate contribution to the multinational military mobilization and operations referred to in section 3; or

(2) such military mobilization and operations are terminated.

SEC. 5. DISPOSITION OF ADDITIONAL DUTIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is established in the Treasury of the United States a fund to be known as the Desert Shield Reimbursement Fund which shall be available, subject to appropriation Acts, only for the reimbursement of appropriations made to support the United States participation in the military mobilization and operations referred to in section 3.

(b) DEPOSITS.—There shall be deposited into the Fund established under subsection (a) all duties collected pursuant to section 4.

SEC. 6. REPORT.

No later than the 180th day after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to the Congress a report on the implementation of this Act, including, with respect to each foreign country the products of which are subject to duties imposed under section 4(a) (1) and (2), the bases for the determination made under section 3 regarding that country and the amounts collected by reason of such duties.

(From the New York Times, December 19, 1990)

IS UNCLE SAM GETTING STIFFED?

(By Jim Sasser)

WASHINGTON.—Early next year, the Pentagon will ask Congress for at least $20 billion in additional funds for Operation Desert Shield. That's just to keep the peace. A full-scale shooting war could cost the U.S. from $1 billion to $2 billion per day. At that rate, all of the $41 billion in deficit reductions we achieved in the budget agreement would be wiped out in a single month.

Though economic issues are clearly of lesser moment when weighed against the lives of thousands of young Americans, the economic consequences of war demand attention.

There is a heavy dose of irony in the specter of America mobilizing for a war to protect our economic self-determination and then sinking into economic quicksand beneath the cost of the operation itself.

All of which poses a fundamental question: Where are the financial contributions of our key allies, especially those who have more to lose than we do from a disruption of Persian Gulf oil?

Overall, the Bush Administration, preoccupied with forging international support for the use of American force in the gulf, has given scant attention to the question of who will pay. It has shown little interest in alerting the public to this issue and has exerted minimal pressure on our allies to pay up.

Japan relies on the Persian Gulf for some 70 percent of the oil it uses to sustain its $3 trillion-a-year economy. Its leaders reluctantly pledged $4 billion to the gulf effort—$2 billion in military assistance and $2 billion in foreign assistance.

As of Nov. 30, the Pentagon reported that its Major Foreign Contributors' Responsibility Sharing Program had received from Japan only $374 million, 40,000 Sony Walkmen and a few Toyotas.

Unified Germany arguably has more to gain from stable oil prices and a reliable new world order than any other industrialized nation. Nonetheless, Bonn has offered just $800 million, and, to date, we have received only $330 million of that sum.

A more glaring case still in Saudi Arabia, whose royal family asked the U.S. to protect that nation's immense oil reserves. A safe Saudi Arabia has been able to increase oil production in a tight market and realize a windfall profit of some $150 million a day. That's at a time when Americans are paying $80 million more per day for our gulf oil imports than we did prior to the August invasion of Kuwait.

The Saudis originally promised $3 to $5 billion in cash and in-kind contributions. So far, they have contributed only $987 million in cash and materiel—about 6.5 days' worth of their windfall oil profits.

Clearly, something is out of joint. America's share of the cost simply doesn't match our share of the international risk.

The Administration announced this week that it will seek $5 billion in additional foreign aid support from the allies to help Turkey, Jordan and Egypt offset the economic losses they have suffered since the crisis began. That seems a fair and generous course. In the meantime, Secretary of State James Baker should press the delinquent allies to pay their debts to the Desert Shield fund and not to accept "the check's in the mail" as an answer.

Every nation with a definable interest in the Persian Gulf should make a contribution that is commensurate with its interest. With our NATO allies and, especially with Japan, we should make this question a centerpiece for any future trade discussions. Moreover, we now have sufficient leverage in Saudi Arabia to simply demand a greater contribution from that country.

If we don't insist on that, our orchestra of nations against Saddam Hussein is virtually a one-man band.

WHAT THE LANGUAGE OF GOVERNMENT ACT MEANS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, as we open this 102d Congress, we are concerned with commitments—both around the world and at home. Commitments to world peace, to the end of hunger, to education, health care, fiscal responsibility—concerns that are vital to the future of our Nation and the world.

I come before the House of Representatives today seeking a commitment to our common language. Through passage of the Language of Government Act, we will establish English as our language of public business. The time has come for us to formulate a clear language policy for our country. To say to those who come here and to those who live here: It is important to know the common language of the United States. It is important to know the language spoken by 98 percent of our people.

Why do we need such a policy?

There is no more important reason for this legislation than unity. More than 150 languages are represented within our Nation's borders. In military affairs alone, the use of a common language is essential. Can you imagine the chaos in the Persian Gulf if the armed forces of the United States had to operate in 150 different languages? For the sake of a unified command, our military functions in our common language—English.

This legislation is not an attempt to stifle the use of other languages in the United States. Nations around the world—more than half of them, in fact—designate official languages in which their government operates. Countries like Venezuela, which specifies that Spanish is its official language. Does that mean that Venezuela prohibits the use of any other language but Spanish? Of course not. It means only that the Government of Venezuela functions in Spanish and it is important to know Spanish in Venezuela. Those who oppose official language in the United States do not understand the concept.

The essential issue of language of government is communication. Through our shared language, we debate our differences and reach compromises. We are united by respect for individual rights, belief in human dignity and freedom, and love of country. These feelings cannot be seen or felt, but they can be articulated through a common language, as they have been for more than two centuries of our Nation's history.

Yet our commitment to our common language is so undefined that the percentage of public school students who can read and write English is higher in the Scandinavian countries than it is in the United States. School children in Sweden, Norway, Finland, Denmark, and Iceland exhibit a greater English proficiency than school-age youngsters in this country.

In fact, it is possible to obtain a high school diploma in some parts of the United States without knowing the English language. This, at a time when illiteracy is crippling our work force. Last year, 44 percent of the applicants for jobs at the Prudential Insurance headquarters were unable to read at the ninth-grade level. Motorola has found that 80 percent of its applicants cannot pass a simple seventh-grade English comprehension test. With our illiteracy rate one of the highest in the world, we can no longer ignore the importance of English to our economic well-being.

The Language of Government Act establishes a commitment to our national language—not because English is better than any other, but because it is our common language. Because communication among our diverse people is essential to the well-being of our Nation.

This act does not legislate the use of English outside of Government. It does not interfere with the teaching of other languages or affect bilingual education. It has nothing to do with the language of the home, the church, the community center, or the conversation between two neighbors over the back fence. The Language of Government Act involves the language of public business, not private enterprise.

Because our Government operates in English now, this law will change very little about the way our Government conducts its business. This law, however, ensures a precise language of communication for governing. By making English our language of Government, we reaffirm our belief that a common language promotes unity and serves as a bridge for understanding in our diverse society.

Efficient communication among the branches of Government and among our people enables stability and diversity. This act provides a precise, unequivocal form of communication of our Nation's business, and I urge my colleagues to join me in its passage.

MANDATORY IMPORT BAN ON FOREIGN VIOLATORS OF IRAQ EMBARGO

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ABERCROMBIE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, we can crush Saddam Hussein with sanctions and avoid a bloody war—but only if our allies stop cheating on the embargo.

We need tougher measures to enforce the sanctions. Right now, dozens of companies in Germany alone are under investigation for selling goods to the Iraqis. This kind of profiteering is unconscionable, especially when thousands of American lives are on the line.

The pattern is by now familiar. Western companies sell critically needed supplies to middlemen in Lebanon and Cyprus, who then smuggle the goods through Jordan or Syria into Iraq. Big profits are made up and down the line and the Iraqis get the chemical additives they need to refine jet fuel and purify drinking water. The big loser is the American soldier in the desert, who may go to war because the sanctions aren't working.

Well, let's make them work. The German Government says it has no authority to punish its companies if they sell goods to Iraq via third countries. We can help them out here. Today, I am reintroducing a bill I first put forth last September that puts a mandatory import ban on any foreign company found cheating on the embargo. The big chemical companies might think twice about who they deal with if they know the entire United States market is on the line.

These firms should carry the burden of proving that their goods don't wind up in Iraqi hands. It's a hard line to take, but much less costly than going to war. In any case, we owe it to our young men over in Saudi Arabia and their families to at least try and make the sanctions work.

INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO PROVIDE TAX AID TO DESERT SHIELD TROOPS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to ease the tax filing burden for American troops serving our country as part of the Desert Shield operation. This legislation is in recognition of the sacrifice and commitment of the men and women serving our country so well in the Persian Gulf. Making their tax responsibilities a bit less burdensome is the least we can do in return.

Specifically, the legislation would provide automatic tax-filing extensions to individuals who are serving in the Persian Gulf as part of the Desert Shield operation. Under the legislation, the time for filing tax returns, claiming refunds, and performing other acts required under the Federal tax laws would be extended until 60 days after the individual completes his or her services in the Persian Gulf as part of the Desert Shield operation. No interest charges would be due on tax underpayments for the period of the automatic extension. The Government would pay interest, however, on tax refunds.

Under current law, automatic extensions of time for filing Federal tax returns and performing certain other acts required under the tax laws are already available for troops in an area which the President has designated by Executive order as a "combat zone." In the event that these conditions are fulfilled, this relief would become available. The legislation which I am introducing today, however, would provide tax relief to the Desert Shield troops in the Persian Gulf without regard to any requirement that it be designated a combat tax zone, and without prejudice to any other tax relief currently available.

Under the legislation, this tax relief would be available as long as the President designates units of the Armed Forces to be part of the Desert Shield operation. It is anticipated that the Secretary of Defense shall provide to the Internal Revenue Service in a timely fashion the name and taxpayer identification number of each member of each designated unit performing services in the Persian Gulf area as part of the Desert Shield operation. It is also anticipated that this tax relief would be available only in response to the imminent, temporary hostilities in the Persian Gulf area, and would not be perpetuated, for example, for permanent garrisons of troops abroad.

Mr. Speaker, I urge strong support of all my colleagues for this important legislation, and hope that it can be enacted as expeditiously as possible.

DISABLED VETERANS DESERVE INFLATION INCREASE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, in the closing moments of the 101st Congress, the Congress attempted unsuccessfully to approve a cost-of-living adjustment to benefits for the Nation's service-disabled veterans and their widows. Ironically, other groups receiving Government benefits did receive inflation increases. Now, we have the opportunity to correct this serious omission.

Today, in an effort to expedite this matter, Representative BOB STUMP and I, along with 225 cosponsors, are introducing legislation that would provide a 5.4-percent cost-of-living adjustment for 2.2 million veterans who draw VA compensation for their service-connected injuries and disabilities. This increase also would apply to 300,000 widows and children of veterans who have died of service-connected causes. This COLA would be retroactive to January 1.

Mr. Speaker, other important veterans legislation passed by the House and left hanging at the end of 1990 will be reintroduced and considered separately in coming weeks, but it is of utmost importance that we move this bill quickly so that benefits for our service-disabled veterans can keep pace with the cost of living. If we approve this COLA bill without delay, veterans can begin receiving the increase in their March checks.

Passage of this bill should be the first priority of the 102d Congress.

THE PERSIAN GULF CRISIS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, it is the end of an exciting day. It is swearing-in day, and this is my fifth time that I have been sworn into the Congress, going into my ninth year. I want to thank my constituents for this great honor. But tonight I have a heavy heart because I feel a great sense of uneasiness for this country, a great sense of uneasiness for our young people who are in the Middle East.

I think it is time that the Congress debated the Persian Gulf crisis. I am here tonight for that purpose. I am taking some time here because I promised my constituents that I would do everything that I could do to stop a war from starting in the Persian Gulf. It took us a long time to stop the Vietnam war. How much better it would be to stop a war before it starts. So I am starting a dialog tonight which no doubt will be continued.

In my district in California, 1,000 people turned out for two community meetings that I held, and 95 percent of them, by a show of hands, said they wanted us to find a peaceful way out of the Persian Gulf crisis, that they did not want to have to go to war. They said they would vote no on a resolution to go to war. I promised them I would come here and I would do what I could. My constituents believe that I have a duty and an obligation as a Member of this wonderful House of the people to uphold the Constitution of the United States of America, including article I, section 8, which gives Congress, and only Congress, the right to declare war.

So I went on a lawsuit that was organized by my colleague, Mr. RON DELLUMS of California, and the judge ruled on that lawsuit. He said, yes, the Congress and only the Congress, has the right to declare war; that the President is the Commander-in-Chief, and he can, of course, respond to an attack and he can act if our forces are in danger, but when it comes to a full-blown declaration of war, that must come from this Congress, not the United Nations and not from all the leaders of the world. When it comes to committing our kids, it is this Congress which must go on record.

So I say to those who might write or might say that it is unpatriotic for Congress to debate or to disagree with the war option, that this is not unpatriotic, that it is not unpatriotic to debate and discuss the Persian Gulf issue. It is patriotic.

I want to note that I have been joined in this Chamber by a leader in this fight to make sure that Congress gets to fulfill its constitutional responsibilities, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN]. In a little while I am going to yield to him. I will yield to the gentleman in a few minutes, after I go through my chart.

The thing that makes our Nation great, the thing that makes America great is not our arsenal of weapons. Many countries have weapons. We know that. We sold them to a lot of countries. The Soviet Union sold weapons to a lot of countries, and China sold weapons to a lot of countries. That is not what makes this country great.

What makes this country great is our system, our Constitution, our freedoms. The whole world is choosing our form of government. They are sending for our Constitution, for our Bill of Rights; they are not sending for our weapons. They are sending for our recipe for freedom, and in that recipe for freedom, in that Constitution is article I, section 8, and that says clearly that Congress, and only Congress, has the power to declare war.

We debate our issues out in the open. We disagree with our President sometimes, although we respect the office. We even disagree within parties sometimes. We disagree with each other, but we are loyal, and we are respectful to that system that our Founders laid out for us. In that spirit, we bring discussion and serious debate to the great issues of the moment.

Surely we cannot remain silent in the face of what could happen on January 15. Surely we will not run and hide in the face of 300,000 of our kids on the ground in the sands of Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to yield to my colleague because he brought home something to me today as we discussed this issue. This is the moment for me to yield to him about what is happening to our kids that we have over in Saudi Arabia. At this time it is my privilege to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from California for yielding and I applaud her for taking out this special order.

I know we are all caught up in the festivities of our being sworn in again for the Congress. There are many parties, there are receptions, and this is a joyful time in this town. But while all this happening is taking place, most of us are preoccupied by what is taking place in Saudi Arabia, where hundreds of thousands of Americans and many others stand to risk their lives for decisions that are being made in this city.

□ 1720

I thank the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] for calling our attention back to the important issues which Congress should focus on above and beyond the question of whether we are sworn in for a new Congress.

I, of course, have strong feelings about this issue, as does the gentlewoman from California. But two of our colleagues, one from Texas, and one from my home State of Illinois, have even deeper feelings, because each of them has a son who is presently serving in Operation Desert Shield.

One of my colleagues, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COSTELLO], has a son who is a paratrooper on the front line in Saudi Arabia. He has had the opportunity to meet with him once and to speak with him a couple times by telephone. He tells me that life on the front line for our troops is very difficult. For the paratroopers, they shower every 8 days, a hot meal every other day. It is not a very happy life. It is a tough one. We owe all of these men and women who are serving a great debt of gratitude. It goes without saying that our hearts go out to them, and we are doing our best to bring them home safely, as quickly as possible.

But the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] is going to present some information in this special order that is critically important as we consider several factors.

First and foremost, as the gentlewoman said, is the constitutional question. Our Founding Fathers decided that before this Nation went to war and risked or sacrificed the lives of any of its soldiers and sailors, that the American people would have a voice in that process. They would speak through their Representatives in Congress as to whether or not we would run that risk.

The President has been asked repeatedly over the last several months whether he will come to Congress to ask for that authorization before going to war. I will have to say in fairness, he has been equivocal at best.

I think the Constitution is clear and unequivocal. A resolution which I proposed for the Democratic caucus passed by a 5-to-1 margin several weeks ago restating the congressional authority, the only authority, to come forward and decide whether there is a declaration of war.

I hope that this Congress moves forward on that question again. I have introduced a resolution with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] asking that we bring this question before the floor of this House of Representatives as quickly as possible.

Let me make one final point here. The gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] is going to spell out in her special order the contributions that are being made by some of our allies. To some of them I applaud their efforts. They have stood, and they are joining us. We certainly believe that they can do more.

But it is a little unseemly for the United States to be standing out rattling a tin cup asking for these people, who are so dependent on Mideast oil, to contribute moneys toward this effort. At best they are sending checks, and we are sending our children.

When you consider that the Saudi Arabians, for example, have enjoyed an additional oil profit of about $4 billion a month since this crisis has started, it is just unconscionable for me to stand here and try to defend why they are not putting more into an effort that has already cost the American taxpayers $6 billion.

The gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] has called our attention and will in statistics and facts to the details of their contribution. If it is truly an international effort, as it should be, then we should ask for more than we have received from our allies.

I thank the gentlewoman for calling this special order. I support her and applaud her efforts in bringing the attention of this Congress to this critical issue.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank the gentleman very, very much. I also want to say to the gentleman I look forward to debating his resolution, the one he coauthored with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT], to the floor, so that we can once and for all stand up and be counted on this issue of the rights and prerogatives of this Congress under the Constitution to decide if we want to send those kids to war.

I am going to continue for a moment before yielding to my good friend from Oregon.

This Congress needs answers to certain questions. On November 14, I sent a letter to President Bush. I am going to put it in the RECORD of this special order.

I said,

> Dear Mr. President, I write as an individual Member of Congress urging you to pursue a more vigorous and peaceful resolution of the Persian Gulf crisis.

Last week I wrote to the President,

> A friend of mine told me that her 22-year-old Marine Reserve son was asked to prepare his will before being sent to the gulf in January. Mr. President, when you sent our troops to the gulf, you told Congress these troops were in no imminent danger, thereby concluding that the War Powers Act was not triggered. What more evidence of danger is there, Mr. President, than a mother watching her young Marine son draw up his will on the instruction of supervisors?

You know, when you think about it, what does a 22-year-old have to leave his mother? His love, his promise, his hopes, his dreams. What do they put in a will but that?

I have kids who are in their twenties. I know what it takes to put effort into raising children, the love you give them, the support you give them, the love they give you back, the way they make you feel, how proud they make you feel. You do not want to see them die, and you certainly do not want to see them die in a situation that may not be fair to this country, and in a situation where there can be other ways out.

So in that letter I asked the President 11 questions, very straightforward. What are the estimates of American lives lost should we invade Kuwait or Iraq?

What are the estimates of non-American lives lost, both civilian and military?

What are the chances of a regional war taking place?

What are the chances of chemical weapons or biological weapons being used? If they are used, what are the lasting effects of these weapons?

What are the chances that oil supplies would be lost if such an invasion or war took place?

What economic impacts would that have on our country and the free world?

What would the impact on Americans be from terrorist attacks, both at home and abroad, if such a war took place?

I asked the President, when you sent troops to Saudi Arabia, you said they were being sent for defensive purposes. Why not replace those troops with a United Nations peacekeeping force at this time?

I asked when you sent troops to the Persian Gulf, you said you would use economic sanctions as the way to get Iraq out of Kuwait. How long did you think it would take, and why are you losing patience with the approach?

I asked about our allies' burden sharing.

I never got an answer. I got a perfunctory response from somebody who said, "The answers will be coming."

How can I represent my people if I cannot answer those fundamental questions? If I, as a Member of Congress, and my colleagues, do not have the reports, the papers, the advisory memoranda that the President is relying on to make his decisions?

In order to represent my people, in order for Congress to do its job, I decided that I would prepare a resolution of inquiry. I did so. I introduced it today with several Members, a bill that must be acted on within 2 weeks to get the answers to those questions.

We need to know, as we do in any other decision, what are the risks? What will happen under the best of circumstances, a quick war, and under the worst of circumstances, a prolonged war?

We need to know that so that we can weigh the benefits and the risks and make an intelligent decision.

This is not a time to run and hide in this Congress. This is a time to stand up and be counted. This is not a country that is run by a king. This is a country that is run by the Congress, the President, and the judiciary. The people deserve nothing less than the promise of their democracy. The people deserve nothing less than a full debate on this crisis.

Our sons and daughters in the gulf deserve nothing less. The parents of these sons and daughters, and I have some of them in my district, and I have seen their pain. They cannot even talk about it. They must demand nothing less than a full debate and participation of this Congress in this crisis. Not just notification. Not just for a few Members to be consulted, but all of us.

You know, it may be messy to have this debate. It may be inconvenient to have this debate. It may be a wordy debate. It may be a lengthy debate. It may be an untidy debate. But the parents of those sons and daughters and those sons and daughters themselves need the debate, now, before the fact.

Does it make us look weak as a country to have this debate? On the contrary, it makes us look strong. Only a nation that is confident of its system, confident of its freedom, could hold such a debate.

That is what separates us from dictators like Saddam Hussein. You do not hear any debate in his country. You do not hear any quarrels in his country. His country is run by fear, fear of the gun.

So let us show him and the world what democracy is all about, what freedom is all about. Do not let him dictate our agenda. Let us show the world how great a country we are.

We all want the same thing. We all want peace, but we may differ on how to get there. Let the debate begin.

□ 1730

Let us debate the alternatives to war open and in public so the world knows who we are, what we are about. We need to talk about when this policy changed.

I voted in favor of commending the President when he sent our troops to Saudi Arabia. And what is amazing is we drew the line in the sand: mission accomplished. We stopped them at that line. The hostages have come back. We have won victories here. No one would have predicted it. We did that.

Now it is time to let the rest of the policy work and to make this truly be a multinational force keeping the peace. Let the sanctions work.

We need many questions answered. Our greatest treasure is at stake, our young men and women, and our other treasure, our tax dollars, which must be guarded as well.

History shows that war is not that difficult to get into. Getting out of it is more difficult. Getting beyond war is difficult. But it can be done without our losing our credibility and our strength, and the debate must begin because the 435 Members in this Chamber and the 100 in the other Chamber have something to contribute to the debate; they have ideas.

This country does not function by the CIA making decisions. I know our President got a lot of training in the CIA, valuable training in the CIA. That is covert. But when we consider taking this country to war, the debate must begin.

There is a song that Bette Midler just recorded called "From a Distance," and she sings about how everything on Earth looks so beautiful from a distance. The sky looks so blue, the Earth looks so green, the people do not look hungry from far away, nobody looks to be fighting. It all looks so good from a distance she says, but when you get up close, it does not look as good, and we have work to do. It is the job of this Government working together, all of the branches, to make it look good, make it good for all our people up close.

From a distance, to listen to the President's words, it looks like it is the world versus Saddam Hussein. That is what he says, and he got the U.N. resolution, and the Secretary of State, Mr. Baker, flew all around this globe, and he is going to do it again, keeping our allies together. From a distance it sounds good. But let us get up close and see the sacrifices these other countries are making.

I have a chart here I want to share with Members. It shows the largest users of Persian Gulf oil and their contributions to the military effort in the gulf.

Let us take The Netherlands; 100 percent of their oil is from the Persian Gulf. When President Bush talked to us as a Nation, he said our way of life is at stake here. I assume he means our economic way of life, because surely the Government of Kuwait is not a democracy and we are not being threatened directly.

One hundred percent of the oil that The Netherlands uses comes from the Persian Gulf. They have committed no ground troops. They have committed no dollars. So The Netherlands gets 100 percent of its oil from the Persian Gulf, no ground troops, no dollars.

The Japanese, 63 percent of their oil is from the Persian Gulf, no ground troops, even in a defensive way, and a pledge of $4 billion that we just have not seen the check yet. I have to say that we still spend $27 billion a year defending the Japanese sea lanes. It is an outrage that they have pledged $4 billion and we have not even seen it yet.

Spain, 59 percent of its oil is from the Persian Gulf, no ground troops, no dollars pledged.

France, 38 percent, 8,400 ground troops, no dollars pledged.

Italy, 36 percent of its oil is from the Persian Gulf, no ground troops, no dollars.

Australia, 22 percent of its oil is from the Persian Gulf, no ground troops, no dollars.

The United Kingdom, 16 percent, 24,000 troops, the most troops of anyone else in this list, no dollars.

Germany, 11 percent, no ground troops, not even in a defensive capacity, and $2 billion pledged, and we hope we will receive that.

The United States of America, 11 percent of our oil is from the Persian Gulf, 300,000 ground troops, not to mention other troops in the area and $30 billion for a year's worth of that commitment.

It does not take a rocket scientist to see that something is wrong with this chart. If our economic lifestyle is at stake, as the President has stated, certainly these other countries have a worse situation facing them, and yet they do not make anywhere near the commitment of America.

There is one thing I have in my mind, a vision in my mind and I just cannot get it out of my mind, which is the joy and happiness that Secretary of State Baker and the President expressed when the U.N. resolution was passed. I looked behind that U.N. resolution and I knew that they were not commiting very much to the effort, and I said why are they so happy. It is as if these countries are saying, "Go, America, go protect our oil with your sons and daughters and your treasure, and we will thank you for it, and we will vote yes on a resolution in the United Nations."

We need to know more. We need to know what commitments were made to these countries to get their vote in the United Nations, and that is part of what my resolution of inquiry will ask for.

I think the American people need to know this. I think they have to get mad about this. I think we need a multinational force, truly multinational, truly a fair representation of the world on the sands of Saudi Arabia to keep our eye on Saddam Hussein.

Let the sanctions work. America will do its fair share, but not such an enormous and disproportionate share. It is wrong. It is wrong for our country.

I want to yield to my colleague from Oregon, PETER DEFAZIO, a leader in the fight to make sure that Congress gets its say in this matter.

Mr. DEFAZIO. I thank the gentleman for yielding and would like to return to the chart for a moment. I think she is making an extraordinary point here that has been little noted in the American press.

It is true, the United States is dependent for approximately 10 percent of our oil supply on the Persian Gulf region. So, should that supply disappear tomorrow, certainly we would be inconvenienced, but with fleet standards or something else, we could overcome that rather readily.

However, these other nations would be facing economic catastrophe or collapse were there a real threat to their oil being cut off, and this is a point that just needs to be made again and again. Why is it that the United States is there in such numbers and at such extraordinary expense and extraordinary risk to our young men and women in that magnitude, and these other countries, which are theoretically so much more at risk, are not there?

Look at the people of Saudi Arabia. One would think that with a fierce foe on the border, if there were imminent an invasion, they might at least institute a draft or call up some young men to the reserves. No, we do not find that going on in Saudi Arabia. We do not find that they are making any extraordinary effort to put troops on the front lines. It is the United States that is transporting troops 10,000 miles to put them on the front lines.

It was not the people of Saudi Arabia, not the Gulf Coordinating Council.

They just had a meeting, and they met, and they thanked brother Arab nations for all their efforts in the war. They did not thank the United States for our efforts to keep them free in that region.

Mrs. BOXER. Could the gentleman repeat that? I had not heard that. I am completely just stunned.

Mr. DEFAZIO. The Gulf Coordinating Council just finished their summit last week. They put out numerous pronouncements congratulating one another and other nations in the gulf for their extraordinary efforts and cooperation but not a word was said about the U.S. efforts. They have yet to visit or acknowledge our troops. They are just, you know, it is there, we are taken for granted somehow, or we are the mercenaries, or they are so used to having people do their work that we have just become part of that function, like the people they have used for many years to run the oil fields and clean the houses and other things.

If there is this extraordinary threat of invasion and of a takeover of that region by this heinous person, then one would think that they would be calling up their young people, that they would have a call to arms, they would be there in greater numbers, and that goes back to the earlier point that the gentlewoman was making which is: Why did the President of the United States and the Secretary, and I applaud their use of the United Nations. I think that was very wise.

I applaud the fact that we originally sent the Air Force and the Navy to prevent the invasion of Saudi Arabia. But the gentlewoman is right. At what point did we switch from defensive, from using the sanctions, from waiting out and bringing down Hussein through economic and political will and might, when did we change to the inevitability of a war, war that by all accounts would be fought on his terms rather than our terms, a massive ground war which would be an extraordinary mistake for this Nation, for that region? What is our long-term objective in the region?

Is it to bring peace and stability? Or is it purely expediency?

When Iran was the boogie man in the region, we supported Hussein. We built him up. He attacked Iran with chemical weapons. We cheered him on. We said nothing. He blew up the U.S.S. Stark killing sailors, and never accounting for how that attack took place. We said, "That is OK. We do not need really to investigate that. All we need is a simply apology." He attacked his own people, the Kurds, with poison gas.

A few days or 2 weeks before the invasion, we were debating on the floor of this House cutting off aid to Iraq, and the President and the Secretary of State were lobbying against that. Three days before, our ambassador sat down with him and said, "Mr. President, this is an inter-Arab dispute. The United States is not involved in this matter." One would think that if we were going to bring the Nation to war that we might have told him before he invaded Kuwait.

What is the long-term objective, Mr. President? We have got to ask. Where has the administration been?

Where are they now? We are now lurching toward Syria. We are embracing the one person in that region who probably is a worse terrorist and a worse person than Saddam Hussein, Hafez Assad, who harbors Abu Nidal, the people who probably blew up Pan Am 103, the people who assassinated our Marines in Lebanon, and suddenly their enemy is our enemy, and they are our friend. We are embracing them. They are taking over Lebanon basically with our consent.

Mrs. BOXER. The gentleman is so articulate on this point. What it seems to me is happening is that we are becoming like a Saddam Hussein, in other words, rather than the open debate that we always have in this Nation, rather than a coherent policy that I thought we used to have, rather than standing tall for human rights and never meeting with a leader such as the leader of Syria, we are doing that for expediency sake. That is not like this country. There is something wrong with that.

I think the gentleman is so right to interject that into this debate.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Where the gentlewoman started is where we should return to. Let us return to the basics of our democracy and our leadership of the free world and that is the Constitution of the United States of America and the fact that we have an elected body here to represent the people of America to engage in these difficult issues, to have a full and fair debate and to exert the will of the Nation.

If we have a debate on this floor and we decide and we vote for war, so be it. Then the people of America are committed to war and we should support that war and go forward as best we can as a Nation.

But absent that debate, absent consultation by the President, significant consultation, with the U.S. Congress under the War Powers Act, I believe that the President is in jeopardy of violating the Constitution of the United States and doing grievous harm to our democracy, to our Nation, committing us to a war to which I believe the Nation is not ready yet to be committed and, in fact, undermining our leadership of the free world, undermining our leadership of the new world order that the President likes to talk about.

No one doubts that the United States of America could destroy Saddam Hussein. We have the greatest nuclear arsenal in the world. We could destroy him in a second if we so wished. We could obliterate him for all time from the face of the Earth.

Sometimes a great nation shows its greatness and leads the world by restraining itself from such force and engaging in other productive actions.

Everything points to the fact that the sanctions are working. When the President's own head of the CIA says that the sanctions are working, we are bringing him to his knees, within 6 months his military capabilities will be significantly degraded, rationing is being imposed upon his people, he is becoming very unpopular, and we have the entire world cooperating in these sanctions; what would it hurt to wait a bit longer and wait out the sanctions rather than killing tens of thousands of young Americans, men and women, and young Arabs in a fight that will probably destabilize the entire region, bring down the King of Jordan and other moderates in that region, and throw that region into turmoil that, I believe, will last throughout our entire lifetimes.

It makes no sense to this Member of Congress nor does it seem to make much sense to my constituents.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank the gentleman for participating in this special order. I think he has raised some important issues.

As he pointed out, sanctions are going to take patience. Does anyone know how I know that? The President said that. As a matter of fact, I remember so clearly, and he said it with great belief. He said, "We need a lot of patience." I want to know why he changed his mind. What changed his mind? He said we need patience, we need to have a defensive posture in Saudi Arabia, and then suddenly he activated another 200,000 troops, and we are set for a war without debate.

Mr. DEFAZIO. People say, and I have heard members of the administration say, "Well, the American people are not patient. We cannot wait that out." I would point to the fact that we waited on the border of the Soviet Union and East Germany for 50 years after World War II until we won the cold war and the wall and those dictatorships came tumbling down. We have been on the border in Korea for 37 years since an armistice was declared in that area. The United States has tremendous staying power when our cause is just, and we can wait out this two-bit tinhorn dictator, and we can bring him to his knees through economic and political sanctions.

I am convinced that we are a great enough power to do that, and that the American people have the staying power to committing this Nation to doing that. That to me is a preferable course to a hasty rush to a war and the potential catastrophe that would take tens of years to undo.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank the gentleman again. The gentleman is so right.

This is really an opportunity for us in what President Bush calls the new world order to put together a truly multinational group to handle these kinds of hot spots. We are going to have them. Throughout the world's history we will have people like Saddam Hussein, and as the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] says, if we become the 9-1-1 of the world, we are just not going to function. We are going to go broke.

We already have a $300 billion deficit. We cannot do the things we need to do.

I want to tell the Members one story that came out of my community meeting in which a young Kuwaiti woman came to speak at the community meeting, again, 1,000 people at these two meetings, and this young woman was very emotional. She was encouraging the United States to free her country, Kuwait, and she was very moved, and she said in a very broken voice:

> My country is in trouble. War has already started in my country. They are doing terrible things to our people. They are raping our women. It is hell.

A gentleman came up after this woman, and he said to her:

> Young lady, I feel so terrible for you. It must be a terrible thing. But I have news for you, too. There are women getting raped in America every day, and we do not have enough money for rape crisis centers. We do not have prevention programs. We cannot help our own people. We have 37 million people without health insurance. I feel so much for you, and we will do what we can to help, but we cannot take on all the burdens and this type of commitment unless it is as part of a multinational, truly multinational, force.

So we have an opportunity to work ourselves into a new time here where America is one of the leaders, where we have a highly mobile international force under the United Nations to move quickly as we did in Saudi Arabia to draw the line in the sand against aggression and to do what we need to do as part of this new world order.

This is the opportunity we have with this crisis, but we will blow it if it is America, and America only, that loses its treasure. It is not fair, and it is not just.

Let the sanctions continue, as my colleague from Oregon said. Eventually they will force Hussein to mediate and get out of Kuwait. I, for one, think we should let medicine in. We should let food in, but we must not allow him to continue his military machine, and eventually those spare parts will not get in. Eventually, the sanctions will work, and again, the administration people say they are working. We must encourage mediation of this dispute, and I am very pleased that it looks like there is going to be one chance, hopefully, for that to take place, and I encourage that. I think we could have mediation that would result in Iraq getting out of Kuwait, if those sanctions continue, that would result in a test ban treaty, and nonproliferation treaties on nuclear weapons, and it could produce a treaty banning the proliferation of chemical and biological weapons.

We know how to negotiate. This country has done incredible things. We are helping negotiate in the Cambodian situation, and I hope it works. We helped negotiate in Nicaragua, and I hope it will work. We helped negotiate Camp David when Israel and Egypt came to a peaceful agreement that has lasted all these years. If we have done that, we can help negotiate peace in this circumstance.

Again, we have had two of our goals accomplished. Hussein has stopped at the Saudi Arabian line, and the hostages are freed, and now we can allow those sanctions to work.

The American people have sacrificed during these years of the cold war. It has not been easy for Americans. We spent $4 trillion defending NATO from the Warsaw Pact. We spent untold billions defending the Japanese sealanes, and we are still doing it. This is a golden moment in history. If we are correct on the way we handle this dispute, that is through a multinational U.N. peacekeeping operation, not American versus Saddam Hussein, but truly the world versus Saddam Hussein. If we do that, we will be able to have a peace dividend in this country. We will be able to bring those dollars home. We will be able to reduce our deficit. We will be able to invest in our people. It is so long overdue. We did have patience. Fifty years in the cold war. We can come out of the cold war now if we handle this situation correctly. We must be a leader in a new way, a way to bring the world together to stop aggression, not just by rhetoric and saying the world is united, but in reality, so that this kind of chart will never be shown again. When it is shown, it is going to show an equal contribution by the people of the world to peace. I am not saying that we will never have another problem in the world. I could not say that, but I am saying that if we can get beyond war in this case, we will have started off in the postcold war area on the correct foot. We will be strong. We will be wise. Most of all, we will follow this Constitution by allowing the Congress into this debate.

I have to tell Members the wisdom of our country lies not in the White House, not in these Chambers, not even in the halls of the Supreme Court. The wisdom of this country lies in our people. Our people have the wisdom. Members should have heard those thousand people talking to me. They know that there is a better way, other than sending those ground troops, into war. They know. They have seen the sacrifices of past generations. What is amazing to me, if we listen carefully, it is the former generals that are coming out and saying, "Slow down." It is even Senator DOLE, a Republican leader in the Senate who says that this country is not ready for war. He knows the hell of war. He has been there. I do not know the hell of war. I only know what I read. I only know what people tell me. I feel it in my heart, but I cannot even imagine.

As a matter of fact, when people say to me, "Do you think, BARBARA, this country is going to go to war," I do not even answer the question, because to me, to make that leap to think of those kids going into war is too big of a leap for me to make. Therefore, I hope this diplomatic effort by the President, by the Secretary of State, is successful. They will not haggle over what time of the day to meet, what day of the week to meet. Meet and talk; meet and talk, because there is too much at stake. What is really at stake here at this point in our history, are hundreds of thousands of our kids, and many other people, that will be hurt if aggressive action is taken.

Saddam Hussein has to be on notice that the world does not go along with his view of it. The world does not look kindly on one nation taking over another nation. That is clear. But we stopped him at the Saudi line. Everyone knows right now if he took aggressive action that would be it for him. He knows that. So let Members try to resolve the matter peacefully. If we do, when history is written, it would be said that at a very difficult moment in history, the American people and its leaders in the White House, in the Congress, and all the streets of America, pulled together and figured out a better way. If we do that, I know this country will reach its greatness, because we will be able to take our resources and use them to make this the greatest Nation on Earth.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and to extend their remarks on the subject of my special order today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

HIGHEST PRIORITY: DEPOSIT INSURANCE REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, today, taking the opportunity presented to Members by this first day in the life of the 102d Congress in our history, I introduced legislation which I consider to be of the highest priority: deposit insurance reform, and as an inseparable adjunct, reform of our regulatory system, if it can be called a system.

Two years ago, the House gave me a tremendous and high privilege, the high honor and responsibility to be the chairman of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs. Today, I have the renewed privilege, and hence, the equal honor to serve in that capacity again. Two years ago, the highest priority for the committee was to reform the savings and loan industry, a path that has proved to be far more costly than anyone ever imagined, made tougher by economic conditions that combine the problem of that industry and, of course, today with the long shadow of war and the toll already taken, and the impact on our economy, with the altered cost of energy.

Let me say by way of parenthesis, that I called a hearing of the committee this last month. The idea was to review the economic impact of the developments in the Persian Gulf area, as it is so called, and we brought forth some preeminent witnesses.

Unfortunately, the press ignored all but one, and that was Chairman Greenspan, who to his everlasting credit accepted my invitation to appear before the committee.

Chairman Greenspan said, and it was overlooked by the press, the most impressive thing of all, and he said that if indeed we are, and he said, "I am not saying we are in a recession, because who defines that, but we are in a downturn. I am very disturbed by the increased incidence of unemployment"—and let me say this by way of added parentheses. Let me give some statistics. He did not give them. I got them from other sources, official Government sources.

In the month of October, our country lost 173,000-plus jobs. In the month of November alone, we lost 287,000-plus jobs, so we may not be in a recession. We may be in what we would have always called a depression.

So we see the impact now, even without a shooting phase. God willing, I hope we never will see that, but all we can do is hope and pray.

So that even though we did not stop or stem the bloodletting that had been suffered by the people in the case of the S&L industry, and mostly because we have no control over the administrative process once the Congress legislates general policy, reforms and sets up a regulatory umbrella.

Under the Constitution, there is no way that we can constitutionally go in and preempt the executive branch from the administrative responsibility.

I wish we had that power, because I could have absolutely had at least some say-so in avoiding the basic reasons why the bloodletting has not been stemmed, and therefore the escalating and the exponential increase in the projected cause of the resolution of even the S&L's, not talking about banks even.

Let me say again, more banks have failed than S&L's; so that not having any power to control party administration, the lateness of appointment of key officials to the agencies that resulted from the reform bill, we have to sit back and do the best we can by being patient and by exerting good will toward those who do have the responsibility of administering, yet in great anxiety seeing the things that should be done are not being done, things that are being done should not be done.

The industry that remains is one with sound standards, nevertheless. Two-thirds of the S&L industry is still there.

With tough regulation and sober outlook, the crooks are being steadily and resolutely jailed. Its high fliers have been run off and the remains of wrecked institutions are being cleaned up, and as I say, not as efficiently as we would like, but at least it is being done.

This task and the money to carry it out must be continued, however, painful the process might be and however slow and unyielding the response to our legislative advice is continuing to be.

Today we face still another great reform task, one of great complexity, but one that is unavoidable if we are to prevent another deposit insurance debacle. As a matter of fact, we do.

It is clear, as I have been saying, that the two main insurance funds are broke. It is clear that that is dramatic evidence that the system has broken down, as some of us have been anticipating, predicting, and talking about for over 20 years.

Today we must confront the task of rebuilding the bank insurance fund and reform the way the deposit insurance system is administered. At the same time, we must overhaul the way financial institutions are regulated. We must do these things because it does little good to throw tens of billions of new dollars into a system that has broken down.

Failure to understand reform would be akin to putting more oil into the crank case of a broken down motor. The system might run awhile, but it would foul the air, never run right, and in the end be too costly to fix.

Every nation must have a banking system that is efficient, that is responsive to the economic needs of the country, that serves the public well, and that enjoys public confidence above all.

This must be a system that operates in a safe and sound manner, that is well regulated, and that is capable of operating in a profitable manner.

It is not enough for us merely to guarantee depositories and depositors against loss. The best insurance in the world will not work if the building and fire codes are not good or are not enforced, nor is insurance any good if it is so costly that no one can afford its burden.

Today the Nation's banks are operating in a climate wholly changed from that of 10 years ago, much less than that over 50 years ago, which was before the war and in a depression when this system was basically formed. They are ill-equipped to do so and the vast number of bank failures in the past few years proves this.

Ten years ago the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation was rebating insurance premiums to banks. Today the corporation reserves stand at their lowest levels in history. That is how dramatically this picture has changed.

The highest priority my committee has is to overhaul the banking system, and that task must begin immediately.

I wish I could have had my way 2 years ago and could have joined it to the S&L reform, but of course that was impossible.

I am introducing legislation today that addresses major elements of the deposit insurance system's problems and that overhauls the regulatory system for all depository institutions. It will be known as H.R. 6.

This bill also contains a number of badly needed reforms that will require depository institutions to be far more responsive than they are today to the needs of the average customer.

The bill I am offering today concentrates on safety and soundness because this is what must come before all else in banking and finance; but banks also need a more reasonable opportunity to be profitable if they are to be safe, sound, and efficient.

It would do us little good to engineer a safe automobile if no one could afford to build it, so we must also find ways to make banks more competitive than they are today so that they can attract the capital they need to carry out their vital economic functions.

The essential first step, however, is to develop a framework within which a better banking system can safely operate. There are certain simple principles that I want to discuss. First, the regulators of financial institutions should be independent. They should be independent of narrow industry interests, independent of narrow agency turf interests, and independent of transitory political interests.

Too often regulators have been captured by the industry that they are supposed to be regulating, or crippled by interagency fueds or cowed by political pressures generated by those who find effective regulation inconvenient.

Second, those who charter and regulate institutions should be separate from those who insure deposits.

Let me say for the record and in all justice to myself, because rather than ever having been commended, I have been more criticized than not for having spoken out in this well and this forum since the first month I came to the Congress, going now on 30 years, because it is this that I have discussed and this particular issue that since the first credit crunch in June 1966, I brought to the then great chairman, my fellow Texan, Mr. Patman, saying because we had the first credit crunch in June and that is what they called it for the first time, because the prime interest rate was jacked up overnight 1 whole percentage point and that immediately affected the S&L industry that was traveling with a certain privilege of what was known then as regulation 2, which is fancy language, and what it means is that the law gave them a little advantage in interest yield so they could compete with other financial institutions in offering long-term fixed 30-year mortgages.

In other words, lending long and borrowing short. Unless they had a little advantage, nobody could stay in business if you do that, lend long and borrow short.

So that 1-percent prime interest rate hike destroyed and made them vulnerable, destroyed their stability. However, the interest rate picture leveled off.

But I warned, and I went to the chairman and I said:

> Mr. Chairman, the problem here is that this S&L industry, the same arm that insures is also chartering and that is not good. That is going to prove ultimately, some dim day, and I hope never, but I think the possibility and potential is there for disaster.

I said unlike the bank insurance fund, the FDIC, all that does is insure, it does not charter. But when I said "bank" that triggered in his mind an objection. He was known as Mr. S&L and he was also fought intensely and he fought back at what he called the big eastern banking interests.

So I think that second in this vital function we separate the insuring from the chartering function. Each has served as a check against the other.

A regulator that is also an insurer has a built-in conflict which can lead to disaster, as we saw in the case of the old S&L Insurance Corporation.

Third, regulation should be unified rather than split, scattered as it is today.

Fourth, regulation should be firm, unquestionably so. This regulation should reward good management, just as effectively as it punishes bad management.

Fifth, deposit insurance should be operated solely for its real purpose, the protection of ordinary depositors, not a guarantor, as it is today, of 99.5 percent of all deposits.

The average deposit in American commercial banks, insured banks, is not even $8,700. That means that there are a lot of Americans that have less than that. This is a median average.

So who is getting all of these payoffs? That is why I have said that the way they have been doing it, it is a bottomless pit. It will never have the money to pay out because they are paying out 99.5 percent of all deposits. That includes the uninsured, that includes those multimillionaires who have more than $100,000 and are being paid out as if they were insured, regardless of size and regardless of the intent of the law. Now no insurance system can survive if it proposes to underwrite every risk, and such a system only increases laxity and risky behavior, with the ironic result that it magnifies instability.

Sixth, the deposit insurance system is intended to serve depositors with convenient and affordable services, and the law should foster a responsive system of consumer banking services.

Those are the principles upon which my bill rests. I want to emphasize that I am also concerned with the profitability of the banking system. A system that is not profitable cannot attract capital, cannot provide affordable services and cannot function effectively as a provider of credit. A system that cannot compete effectively cannot survive, and no regulatory system, however elaborate, can keep afloat a system that cannot compete.

Let me highlight the main features of the bill as I am offering it today.

First it restricts deposit insurance to the $100,000 per account that the law always intended and still does. Any depositor could insure $100,000 at any one time. In addition, insure an equal amount placed in a retirement account such as a Keogh or individual retirement account. But the bill would prohibit paying off multimillion dollar accounts that are now insured for institutional investors and professional investors of one kind or another.

Today there are simply no effective limits on the amount of insurance deposits and therefore no limits on the amount of taxpayers' liability.

The reason is short and simple. There has been a usurpation, improperly, by the regulatory authorities who have interpreted such odious practices as "too big to fail." This is not only a threat to the taxpayer, it also saps the banking system of needed discipline.

The limit I am proposing effectively covers every average depositor 10 times over, and it also protects virtually every saver who wants to protect his nest egg.

The limit I am proposing simply restates and makes effective the intent of the law to provide ample deposit insurance for the average depositor.

The legislation will send into the field a streamlined and coordinated regulatory force, armed with the power, the mandatory power to intervene swiftly when an institution's conditions deteriorate.

No longer will the regulator be able to hem and haw, to engage in wishful thinking while institutions drop to zero net worth and become basket cases left for the care and feeding by taxpayers.

When the gauges creep into the red zone, the regulators must act, limit additional exposure to the insurance fund, and require stiff remedial steps. Examinations will no longer be a sometime thing. They will be an annual affair. States that carry out their own examinations for State chartered institutions must meet federally prescribed standards if they want Federal insurance.

Accounting standards are upgraded, and institutions with $100 million or more in assets must have annual audits. Institutions that run lucrative offshore and other foreign operations will be required to pay premiums on deposits in those institutions.

When the National Bank of Washington was closed earlier last year, FDIC paid off depositors in the institution's Nassau branch, a branch which had not paid one single dime into the insurance fund.

My bill ends that inequitable and costly charade.

Institutions that engage in risky activities, such as Charlie Keating did, will pay at the insurance window in the form of risk-based premiums. No more free rides for the high flyers.

The Federal deposit insurance fund should not be used to underwrite the risky or the imprudent practices of State-chartered institutions as has happened in the past.

Federally insured institutions would be restricted to the practices permitted to federally chartered institutions.

Nor should an institution system be required to grant insurance on an automatic basis to institutions that get a new charter, as they are today.

The decision to insure would be separate from the decision to charter.

All insurance functions will be placed in this unitary structure that I call the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Federal Reserve will then continue to essentially have a role in monetary and economic policy.

The legislation also provides new safeguards for the customers of financial institutions. The taxpayers would stand behind the insurance and regulatory system, that is.

These provisions include requirements for a clear statement of interest on accounts, basic banking services, improvement to community reinvestment and strengthening antidiscrimination efforts in lending and machinery to ensure that consumer laws are enforced. I believe the regulatory system should be consolidated and made independent.

This would cut out the kind of costly, inefficient, overlapping, and in many respects, irrational regulation today.

A unified system can look at holding companies, banks and their affiliates in a way that is close to impossible today. And a unified system will have unified concepts. What is capital for?

One would be capital for another. What is one kind of risk in one case in an institution of a given nature will be the same kind of risk in another, and this regulatory system should be independent, as I have said earlier and repeat now, capable of making objective assessments without regard to narrow interests of industry or agency or of politics or external politics.

☐ 1820

The examination and supervisory functions of the Federal Reserve, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the National Credit Union Administration and the Office of Thrift Supervision will be placed in one new agency that I would call the Federal Depository Institutions Regulatory Agency. The legislation puts heavy new responsibility on the holding companies, the payment of the insured institutions, to curtail risky activities in the subsidiaries making them liable for losses in the insurance fund.

This bill provides and represents a first step. It is not all that needs to be done or all that must be done. But it represents the first essential step toward rationalizing a regulatory system that no longer is workable.

President John Kennedy was a great and personal friend, used to say that a thousand mile trip or voyage had to begin with the first step, and this is what this reflects and represents. It is a first essential step, as I say, toward a rational regulatory system, toward making regulation effective, toward restoring deposit insurance to its real purpose and toward insuring a system that is responsible to the public need.

I have said, and I will say now because I can see it is going to be controversial, I will be fired at from all directions, that the interests that are out to protect their interest no matter what the cost is to the general interest have already pitched their tents on the Potomac since last year. I know that. But as always I have ultimate and supreme confidence in the good will, the good judgment, the good faith, and the absolute sense of responsibility I know is inherent in every one of the colleagues that I happen to know personally, whether they like me or do not like me, or whether they agree with me or do not. I have, and I always, assume that a colleague's motives are of the purest, like I think mine are, until proven otherwise by any doubt by actions that all then can judge.

So, having that faith, and given this as a first step, and having the prime responsibility as chairman of this committee, to set the agenda, mark the course, blaze a trail, the bill today represents that effort.

Much more will be said about this as the Congress proceeds. We face no greater need than to act on the problems that this bill is addressing.

I urge my colleagues to become acquainted with the issues and to weigh carefully these recommendations, for what we are·dealing with is the very foundation of a robust economy, and I will go further. I am not going to go into that issue. But it is the one that worries me more even than this, and that is our precarious situation with the currency that is fast on the road to debauchery.

What good does it do us to boast of our standard of living which has been under attack? How can we say we have any kind of defense mechanism, or much of freedom, if we suffer the loss of the value of our currency? The dollar has lost 55 percent of its value in less than 6 years.

Mr. Speaker, this cannot go on. We are in danger, and my biggest fear, because to me it is a clear and present fear, is that the dollar will be supplanted and replaced as the international reserve unit, and I cannot tell my colleagues what that will mean. That means we are gone. We are the only nation whose citizens have the luxury of paying their debts in their own currency. The dollar is replaced, and the danger is great.

Nobody will listen to me. Again this is something I have been talking about since 1979, in August.

But as of a year now it is clear, it is limpidly clear, that our Nation is at a precipice. Should I not speak out? Yes, I am, even if nobody listens.

This is an issue that sounds almost esoteric to the average, but it has everything to do with whether we have a continued economic freedom, even if it is relative, or we do not. And the threat is great. It would not take much.

When I have thrown this out to the great leaders in finance, in government, in private, international banking, I am told the same thing: "Oh, well, you know it's not going to happen. If it does, it will be in some long, distant future," and when I say, "Why not? Why can't it happen in 6 months? In a year?," they cannot tell me; they say, "It's not likely."

But then this is what the great committee on national economics at a point was telling Herbert Hoover in June 1929. In the words of the committee, it said, "Mr. President, we see nothing but unrestricted, unlimited prosperity to the foreseeable future." That was in May and June 1929, and you had that Black Friday that following October.

We know there are things we cannot predict, but we know there are things that we can project because of the fact that we are charged with knowledge, and so I have spoken out, and I am saying now, even though I am straying from the basic subject matter, because why? I am not straying because no matter what we do domestically, we can solve all our problems domestically, but we have no control over these external forces now over which we no longer have control.

I repeat, my colleagues. I am urging my colleagues to become intimately acquainted, and I want them to know, whether they are a member of this committee or not, I will continue to do what I pledge exactly the first week of the opening of the 101st Congress. I said I will come before this forum, which I have used greatly, and I will give my colleagues an accounting of what I, as the newly elected chairman of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, intend to do and thus far have been able to do, and that I did all through the 101st Congress.

Even as late as after adjournment of the 101st Congress I sent each Member, not just the members of the committee, Members of the House, what the intent was by way of reform which is reflected in this bill I introduced today. With these reforms we can newly energize the engines of our economy. Without them we will only grow weaker.

Mr. Speaker, the issues are tough, but does that mean we do not try to confront and overcome?

Let me say that just within the last 32 hours we have had ominous developments in the State of Rhode Island. There the newly elected Governor has just in effect declared a bank and credit union holiday. And today I got the first statistics from the staff in Rhode Island. Fifteen credit unions have been closed reflecting $1.5 billion of financial net worth.

□ 1830

They will only be able to save through Federal chartering 4 out of the 15. Why? Because a State insurance system went bust. It was contracted out privately.

Let me say something in addition to this. As early as 1984, shadows were cast of coming events when Nebraska, which was a smaller economy, had the first failure of the S&L State insurance system. It ended in scandal, and, if I remember correctly, the impeachment of one of the high State officials.

Then, shortly after that, you had Ohio, and the great crisis in Ohio. With what? With the State uninsured. Also the bankruptcy of the State reinsurance system.

Then we had Maryland right next door. That was worse. You used to have about 122 institutions in Maryland. You have all but a handful. Fortunately, about 82 of them could have been federally chartered. But you still have in Maryland over 15,000 Marylanders that have not gotten all of their money out that they had deposited in good faith and just felt it was insured, did not bother to find out whether it was or was not, or whether it was State, State uninsured, or State inadequately insured.

Fortunately, the State Legislature of Maryland appropriated millions of dollars so they could pay out some of the others. But you still have over 15,000.

What more did you need? I spoke out then, and I said to my colleagues then from this very well, I said, gentlemen, do not harbor and indulge in the luxury of thinking that it is just State. It is coming here on the Federal level.

Our FSLIC, the insurance fund for the savings and loan industry is broke.

Who would listen? Everybody was enjoying the merry-go-round. Why, we even had citizens that were good financial wizards.

I had a little housewife in my city of San Antonio saying, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Congressman, you are out there in the Banking Committee. I have just taken my money out of the S&L here. It was only paying me about 6¾ percent. I put it in a money market account. I am going to get 8 percent, 8¼. Don't you think that is good?

I said that I am not going to give an opinion. I am not a financial consulting individual. I do not know anything about it. I do not have any stocks, bonds, nor investments. All I have ever had is the element of office prescribed in the law that I would be entitled to. I have always made it a full-time job. I felt I was being paid to do a full-time job, so I never got into side activities. I did not want to worry with it.

It was not that I was goody-goody or goody two shoes or anything. It is just that is the way I wanted to be.

So I told this little lady, I said lady, the only thing I will ask you is this: the institution you tell me you drew your funds from is insured. What about this other?

Well, she did not know, and she did not much care to know.

It so happened that that is another loose cannon in our economy today, for over 23 percent of the deposits are uninsured mutual money markets.

So everybody was enjoying the merry-go-round. Why, it is going to last forever.

What about the land? I reported this in 1983 for the first time. Who gave a hoot? I said I know the acreage north of town that is not capitalized in a newly structured S&L, just chartered by the State, in which there is 20,000 acres north of town, you cannot do anything with it. You cannot even build low income or low rent housing. You certainly cannot grow anything on that rocky stretch.

I happen to know that just a year before that I could have bought a whole acre for less than $1,000. All of a sudden this acreage was being put down on the book value of that S&L at $20,000 an acre.

How could that last? All bubbles burst. That is where we are today. We sow to the wind, and we will reap the whirlwind. That is what we are doing right now.

Let me tell you about my home State of Texas. You think I am not worried? When I check on Rhode Island, I immediately said, I wonder how many credit unions I have in Texas that are privately so-called insured.

Well, the figure is about 250. We estimate that there is a total involvement there of some $3 billion worth.

Of course, when I talked about this bill, and I said I believe in bringing all insured depository institutions who are guaranteed by the American taxpayer under that same regulatory umbrella, these start shooting at me right away.

So now, just as of 32 hours ago, I think they can see what I was talking about and what I am talking about now.

The issues are tough. I repeat, the choice is very difficult. But the need to act is urgent, and unavoidable.

FAMILY AND MEDICAL LEAVE ACT

(Mr. REED asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, as the 102d Congress opens I applaud the re-introduction of the Family and Medical Leave Act by my colleague from Missouri, Representative CLAY.

The time for the passage of this legislation, Mr. Speaker, is long overdue. This is the same legislation that was passed in the last session of Congress by both the House and the Senate, only to be vetoed by the President. However, as the economy continues to tighten in the 1990's, it is imperative that families do not have to choose between working for a living and caring for a family.

This act will give working families the time to care for a newborn or ill child, the time to aid an elderly parent in need of assistance, and the time to deal with a personal illness or grievous medical condition, by providing up to 10 weeks of unpaid medical leave for affected employees.

In Rhode Island I cosponsored similar legislation which has become law. Eligible Rhode Island families now have the chance to care for their families in times of crisis. Rhode Island has taken an important step forward, and the Nation should follow.

We can ease the burden of the working men and women who at present are forced to choose between their families and their jobs. We have a national obligation to protect their jobs and the future health and prosperity of their children. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this act and in answering the needs of a rapidly changing work force, by passing this legislation.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Ms. SNOWE (at the request of Mr. MICHEL), after 2:30 p.m. today, on account of her attendance of the inauguration of the Governor of Maine.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 38 minutes p.m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, January 7, 1991, at 12 noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. BILLS DISAPPROVED AFTER SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

The President announced his disapproval of the following bills with memorandums of disapproval as follows:

H.R. 4638—MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I am withholding my approval of H.R. 4638, the "Orphan Drug Amendments of 1990." This legislation would make substantive changes to the orphan drug provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and the Orphan Drug Act.

Enacted in 1983, the Orphan Drug Act created economic incentives for drug companies to develop drugs for rare diseases and conditions—so-called "orphan drugs." Typically, these drugs would not be profitable to develop because of their small patient populations.

By any measure, the Orphan Drug Act has been a tremendous success. A total of 49 new drugs for rare diseases have been approved under this program, and 370 others are in the development stage. These drugs have provided lifesaving treatments for such terrible disease as enzyme deficiency, which affects adversely the immune system of about 40 children nationwide. Until the orphan drug was developed to treat these children, they had to spend their entire lives in the protection of an isolation bubble. One of the first orphan drugs is another example of a triumph. The most difficult form of leprosy affects only 4,000 people. A drug known for over 14 years to be effective in treating this condition was not being marketed by any drug company, because it was considered unprofitable—until the Orphan Drug Act provided the marketing incentive. In a similar manner, orphan drugs provide treatment for terrible diseases for which there is usually no alternative therapy.

I have serious concerns about the effect the H.R. 4638 would have upon the incentive of drug companies to develop orphan drugs. I believe we must not endanger the success of this program, which is due to large measure to the existence of the "market exclusivity" provision in the Orphan Drug Act that allows companies to have exclusive marketing rights to an orphan drug for 7 years. Weakening the current 7-year exclusivity provision would certainly discourage development of desperately needed new orphan drugs.

Under current law, firms may apply to develop the same orphan drug, but only the first firm to have its drug approved receives market exclusivity. The certainty of this 7-year period is the basis of the economic incentive to attract drug firms to invest in orphan drugs.

The bill would make two major changes to the market exclusivity provisions of the Orphan Drug Act. First, the bill provides for "shared exclusivity." Firms that can demonstrate that they have developed the orphan drug simultaneously would be allowed to share the market with the firm initially awarded the market exclusivity. Second, the bill requires the Food and Drug Administration to withdraw the marketing exclusivity as soon as the patient population exceeds a 200,000 patient limit. Both of these changes have the effect of weakening the marketing incentives provided by the Act. Under the bill, the length of the market exclusivity period will depend on how quickly the patient population grows and whether other firms file claims for simultaneous development.

In addition, as currently constructed, the 200,000 patient population limit would be applied to orphan drugs approved prior to the enactment of the bill as well as to those approved in the future. This retroactive rule change would send a troublesome signal to all those who might wish to develop orphan drugs that the Federal Government may change unilaterally the rules for firms that made investment decisions based on the expectation of 7 years of market exclusivity.

I am aware that this bill was passed after a number of compromises among Members of Congress. I am extremely concerned, however, that individuals with rare diseases may suffer because of changes that this bill would make in the incentives to develop new drug treatment. Accordingly, I am withholding my approval of H.R. 4638.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, November 8, 1990.

H.R. 4653—MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I am withholding my approval of H.R. 4653, the "Omnibus Export Amendments Act of 1990." Although this legislation contains constructive provisions, it would severely constrain Presidential authority in carrying out foreign policy.

I agree with the principal goals of this bill, which include improved export controls for, and sanctions against the use of, chemical and biological weapons; sanctions on Iraq; missile technology sanctions; and reauthorization of the Export Administration Act. Indeed, I have recently signed into law provisions on missile technology sanctions and sanctions against Iraq comparable to those contained in this bill. H.R. 4653, however, contains elements that I believe would undermine these objectives and our ability to act quickly, decisively, and multilaterally at a time when we must be able to do so. These provisions unduly interfere with the President's constitutional responsibilities for carrying out foreign policy. Rather than signing the bill, I am directing action under existing authorities to accomplish the bill's principal goals.

I am pleased that the Congress endorses my goal of stemming the dangerous proliferation of chemical and biological weapons. The Administration has worked closely with the Congress to design appropriate and effective legislation to improve our ability to impose sanctions on the nations that use such weapons and any companies that contribute to their spread. Indeed, the Administration supported the House version of the sanctions provision. Throughout discussions with the Congress, my Administration insisted that any such legislation should not harm cooperation with our partners and should respect the President's constitutional responsibilities. Unfortunately, as reported from conference, H.R. 4653 does not safeguard those responsibilities, nor does it meet our broader foreign policy goals.

The major flaw in H.R. 4653 is not the requirement of sanctions, but the rigid way in which they are imposed. The mandatory imposition of unilateral sanctions as provided in this bill would harm U.S. economic interests and provoke friendly countries who are essential to our efforts to resist Iraqi aggression. If there is one lesson we have all learned in Operation Desert Shield, it is that multilateral support enhances the effectiveness of sanctions.

Because of my deep concern about the serious threat posed by chemical and biological weapons, I have signed an Executive order directing the imposition of the sanctions contained in this bill and implementing new chemical and biological weapon export controls. This Executive order goes beyond H.R. 4653 in some respects. It sets forth a clear set of stringent sanctions, while encouraging negotiations with our friends and allies. It imposes an economic penalty on companies that contribute to the spread of these weapons and on countries that actually use such weapons or are making preparations to do so. At the same time, it allows the President necessary flexibility in implementing these sanctions and penalties. Furthermore, the Executive order reaffirms my determination to achieve early conclusion of a verifiable global convention to prevent the production and use of chemical weapons.

The Executive order also directs the establishment of enhanced proliferation controls, carefully targeted on exports, projects, and countries of concern. On this issue, as with other important export control matters, my goal is to pursue effective, multilateral export controls that send the clear message that the United States will not tolerate violations of international law.

I am also concerned that other features of H.R. 4653 would hamper our efforts to improve the effectiveness of export controls. In the rapidly changing situation in Eastern Europe, and in bilateral relationships with the Soviet Union, we have demonstrated the ability to adjust, in cooperation with our allies, export controls on high technology to reflect the new strategic relationships. Last May I asked our allies to liberalize dramatically our multilateral export controls. Negotiations designed to liberalize trade to encourage democratic institutions and open market economies will continue. Our multilateral export controls have contributed significantly to the positive changes brought about in West-East relations. The micromanagement of export controls mandated by H.R. 4653 can only damage these ongoing efforts.

In other areas, H.R. 4653 would be harmful to closely linked U.S. economic and foreign policy interests. For example, under section 128 of the bill there would be extraterritorial application of U.S. law that could force foreign subsidiaries of U.S. firms to choose between violating U.S. or host country laws.

Other sections of H.R. 4653 contain useful provisions that will be implemented as soon as possible. However, additional legal authority is not required to make our export control system reflect the economic and national security realities of today's world. In response to recent world events, I am directing Executive departments and agencies to implement the following changes:

—By June 1, 1991, the United States will eliminate all dual-use export licenses under section 5 of the Export Administration Act to members of the export control group known as CoCom, consistent with multilateral arrangements. In addition, all re-export licenses under section 5 to and from CoCom will be eliminated, consisent with multilateral arrangements.

—By June 1, 1991, the United States will remove from the U.S. munitions list all items contained on the CoCom dual-use list unless significant U.S. national security interests would be jeopardized.

—By January 1, 1991, U.S. review of export licenses subject to CoCom Favorable Consideration and National Discretion procedures will be reduced to 30 and 15 days, respectively.

—By January 1, 1991, new interagency procedures will be instituted to make dual-use export license decisions more predictable and timely.

—By January 1, 1991, the Secretary of State will initiate negotiations to ensure that supercomputer export controls are multilateral in nature and not undermined by the policies of other supplier countries.

—By June 1, 1991, in consultation with industry, we will devise and publish a method to index supercomputer license conditions to reflect rapid advances in the industry and changes in strategic concerns.

—By January 1, 1991, we will significantly increase the threshold for Distribution Licenses to free world destinations and ensure that at least annually these thresholds are adjusted to reflect changes in technology and are consistent with international relationships, including changing requirements to stem the proliferation of missile technology and nuclear, chemical and biological weapons.

In summary, H.R. 4653 contains serious and unacceptable flaws that would hamper our efforts to prevent the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and to ease restrictions on the legitimate sale of dual-use goods to acceptable users. Rather than sign this bill, I have chosen to take a series of steps under existing authorities to ensure that mutually shared objectives are met in a timely and effective manner. I will work with the Congress, upon its return, to enact an appropriate extension of the Export Administration Act.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, November 16, 1990.

H.R. 3134—MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

In the closing days of the 101st Congress, two bills were passed providing for somewhat different benefits for the surviving spouses of assassinated Federal judges. These survivors have suffered profound and tragic losses, and they have our deepest sympathies. I am pleased that the Congress has passed legislation allowing these individuals to receive additional benefits.

One bill—H.R. 5316, the "Judicial Improvements Act of 1990"—has not yet been presented to me for approval. Upon its presentation to me, I plan to approve H.R. 5316, which contains provisions that would increase the benefits, subject to certain limits, for surviving spouses of all assassinated Federal judges on an equitable basis.

My approval of H.R. 5316 makes the approval of another bill—H.R. 3134—unnecessary. Therefore, I am withholding my approval of H.R. 3134, a bill which would have provided somewhat different benefits for Mrs. Joan R. Daronco. This action, in conjunction with my planned approval of H.R. 5316, will ensure that Mrs. Daronco and all such surviving spouses receive their benefits in an equitable manner.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, November 16, 1990.

S. 321—MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I am withholding my approval of S. 321, the "Indian Preference Act of 1990." S. 321 would establish, among other things, a program to provide preferences to qualifying Indian enterprises in the award of Federal grants or contracts using funds appropriated for the benefit of Indians. The bill would impose new, expensive, and often duplicative program responsibilities on the Secretary of the Interior that would be difficult to implement. It would also likely result in Federal agencies assuming new, unfunded liabilities related to Indian preference enterprises.

My Administration strongly supports the goals of S. 321 and is committed to helping alleviate the widespread unemployment and underemployment on Indian reservations. Moreover, the Administration supports efforts to prevent companies from misusing Federal Indian preference programs. Accordingly, amendments are needed to the "Buy Indian Act" to increase Indian economic self-sufficiency and employment opportunities and to prevent utilization of preference provisions by non-qualifying companies. However, S. 321 is seriously flawed and would create more problems than it would solve.

I am withholding my approval of S. 321 to allow further review of the issues in the 102nd Congress. Many of the issues raised by S. 321 are complex and deserve a full airing in both Houses of Congress. The House passed S. 321 in the final days of the 101st Congress without sufficient consideration of these complex issues.

In the interim, I am directing the Secretary of the Interior to take the necessary steps to address the contracting problems identified in the November 1989 report of the Special Committee on Investigations of the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

In particular, I am directing the Secretary to issue guidelines that set forth specific procedures to govern Bureau of Indian Affairs field contracting officers in conducting pre-award reviews of grants and contracts. I am also directing the Secretary to develop and submit proposed regulations to implement the "Buy Indian Act" for Executive review within 90 days.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, November 16, 1990.

S. 2834—MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I have withheld my signature from S. 2834, the proposed "Intelligence Authorization Act, Fiscal Year 1991," thereby preventing it from becoming law. I am compelled to take this action due to the bill's treatment of one highly sensitive and important issue that directly affects the Nation's security, although there also are several objectionable elements of the bill that trouble me.

I cannot accept the broad language that was added in Conference to the definition of covert action. Section 602 of the bill defines "covert action" to include any "request" by the United States to a foreign government or a private citizen to conduct a covert action on behalf of the United States. This provision purports to regulate diplomacy by the President and other members of the executive branch by forbidding the expression of certain views to foreign governments and private citizens absent compliance with specified procedures; this could require, in most instances, prior reporting to the Congress of the intent to express those views.

I am particularly concerned that the vagueness of this provision could seriously impair the effective conduct of our Nation's foreign relations. It is unclear exactly what sort of discussions with foreign governments would constitute reportable "requests" under this provision, and the very possibility of a broad construction of this term could have a chilling effect on the ability of our diplomats to conduct highly sensitive discussions concerning projects that are vital to our national security. Furthermore, the mere existence of this provision could deter foreign governments from discussing certain topics with the United States at all. Such a provision could result in frequent and divisive disputes on whether an activity is covered by the definition and whether individuals in the executive branch have complied with a statutory requirement.

My objections to this provision should not be misinterpreted to mean that executive branch officials can somehow conduct activities otherwise prohibited by law or Executive order. Quite the contrary. It remains Administration policy that our intelligence services will not ask third parties to carry out activities that they are themselves forbidden to undertake under Executive Order No. 12333 on U.S. intelligence activities. I have also directed that the notice to the Congress of covert actions indicate whether a foreign government will participate significantly.

Beyond this issue, I am also concerned by the treatment in the Joint Explanatory Statement accompanying the Conference Report of notification to the Congress of covert actions. I reached an accommodation with the Intelligence Committees on the issues of notifying the Congress of covert actions "in a timely fashion," as required by current law, and have provided letters to the Intelligence Committees outlining how I intend to provide such notice. I was consequently dismayed by the fact that language was inserted in the Joint Explanatory Statement accompanying the Conference Report that could be construed to undercut the agreement reached with the Committees. This language asserts that prior notice may be withheld only in "exigent circumstances" and that notice "in a timely fashion" should now be interpreted to mean "within a few days" without exception. Such as interpretation would unconstitutionally infringe on the authority of the President and impair any Administration's effective implementation of covert action programs. I deeply regret this action.

Additionally, I am concerned that there are several legislatively directed policy determinations restricting programs of vital importance to the United States that I do not believe are helpful to U.S. foreign policy. This bill, like its predecessor last year, also contains language that purports to condition specified actions on the President's obtaining the prior approval of committees of the Congress. This language is clearly unconstitutional under the Presentment clause of the Constitution and the Supreme Court's decision in INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983). I again urge the Congress to cease including such unconstitutional provisions in bills presented to me for signature.

This Administration has had a good relationship with the Intelligence Committees. I am willing to work with the Congress to address the primary issue that has prompted my veto as well as other difficulties with the bill. I will also continue to work with the Congress to ensure there is no change in our shared understanding of what constitutes a covert action, particularly with respect to the historic missions of the armed forces. I am confident that these issues can be resolved quickly in the next Congress through mutual trust and a good-faith effort on the part of the Administration and the Congress.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 5 of Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, the Clerk received the following message from the Secretary of the Senate on Wednesday, November 7, 1990 at 10:00 a.m.: That the Senate agreed to House amendments to S.J. Res. 357, S. 169, S. 555, S. 1931, S. 2056, S. 2566, S. 2857, S. 2930; agreed to House amendment to S. 555, S. 2936, S. 1859, S. 319, and agreed to the Conference Report to S. 2834 and S. 1939, and made appointments to North Atlantic Assembly and Federal Council on Aging.

With great respect, I am,
Sincerely yours,
DONNALD K. ANDERSON,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HONORABLE ROBERT C. SMITH, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The text of the communication from the Honorable Robert C. Smith, Member of Congress, dated December 5, 1990, is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, December 5, 1990.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, H-204, The Capitol, Washington, DC.

DEAR SPEAKER FOLEY: I am writing to announce my resignation from the House effective 12:00 noon, December 7, 1990. A copy of my letter of resignation to Governor Gregg is enclosed.

As you may know, Governor Gregg had decided to appoint me to fill the United States Senate seat recently vacated by Senator Gordon Humphrey. On Wednesday, December 5th, Senator Humphrey was sworn into the New Hampshire State Senate. His resignation from the United States Senate was necessitated by the provisions in the New Hampshire State Constitution that prohibits one individual from simultaneously holding both the offices of State Senator and United States Senator.

It has been both an honor and privilege to serve with you and our fellow House colleagues for the past six years. While I look forward to serving in the Senate, I will always cherish my years in the House.

With warmest regards, I am,
Sincerely yours,
ROBERT C. SMITH.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, December 5, 1990.

Hon. JUDD GREGG,
Governor, State of New Hampshire, State House, Concord, NH.

DEAR GOVERNOR GREGG: For the past six years, I have had both the honor and privilege to represent the people of the First District of New Hampshire in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Your decision to appoint me to fill the United States Senate seat recently vacated by Senator Gordon Humphrey provides me with the opportunity to represent all the people of New Hampshire. As you know, Senator Humphrey's resignation was necessitated by the provisions in the New Hampshire State Constitution that prohibits one individual from simultaneously holding both the offices of State Senator and United States Senator. Senator Humphrey has ably and honorably represented New Hampshire for the last twelve years. I will work hard to live up to the high standards he has set.

With this in mind, I announced my resignation from the U.S. House of Representatives effective 12:00 noon, December 7, 1990 so that I may be sworn in as a United States Senator.

With warmest regards, I am,
Sincerely yours,
ROBERT C. SMITH.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HONORABLE TOMMY ROBINSON, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The text of the communication from the Honorable Tommy Robinson, Member of Congress, dated December 28, 1990, is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, December 28, 1990.

Hon. THOMAS FOLEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, The Capitol, H204, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Effective noon, December 31, 1990, I respectfully resign my position as a member of the United States House of Representatives from the Second District of Arkansas.

Throughout my Congressional career, I have consistently argued that members of Congress should not vote themselves any pay raise until we have taken steps to cut spending and eliminate the deficit. Because of my strong, personal conviction on this matter, I cannot accept any of the pay increase which becomes effective on January 1, 1991. Accordingly, I am submitting this resignation to be effective at 12:00 noon on Monday, December 31, 1990.

In leaving, I would like to emphasize my personal belief that Congress must pass a balanced budget amendment and a Presidential line-item veto to ensure that the Federal Government lives within its means. I have enjoyed my tenure in the House and wish the members of Congress the best in the next session.

Sincerely,
TOMMY ROBINSON,
Member of Congress.

REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

In compliance with Public Law 601, 79th Congress, title III, Regulation of Lobbying Act, section 308(b), which provides as follows:

(b) All information required to be filed under the provisions of this section with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate shall be compiled by said Clerk and Secretary, acting jointly, as soon as practicable after the close of the calendar quarter with respect to which such information is filed and shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate jointly submit their report of the compilation required by said law and have included all registrations and quarterly reports received.

REGISTRATIONS

The following registrations were submitted for the third calendar quarter 1990:

(NOTE.—The form used for reporting is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings. This page (Page 1) is designed to supply identifying data.)

PLEASE RETURN 1 ORIGINAL TO: THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, OFFICE OF RECORDS AND REGISTRATION, 1036 LONGWORTH HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20515

PLEASE RETURN 1 ORIGINAL TO: THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE, OFFICE OF PUBLIC RECORDS, 232 HART SENATE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20510

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

(Mark one square only)

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER____

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER —State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an X in the box at the left, so that this office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."◆

QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following quarterly reports were submitted for the third calendar quarter 1990:

(NOTE.—The form used for reporting is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings. This page (Page 1) is designed to supply identifying data, and Page 2 deals with financial data.)

PLEASE RETURN 1 ORIGINAL TO: THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, OFFICE OF RECORDS AND REGISTRATION, 1036 LONGWORTH HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20515

PLEASE RETURN 1 ORIGINAL TO: THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE, OFFICE OF PUBLIC RECORDS, 232 HART SENATE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20510

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER —State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."◆

STATEMENT OF VERIFICATION

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§ 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "NONE" in the space following the number.

QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following reports for the second calendar quarter of 1990 were received too late to be included in the published reports for that quarter:

(NOTE.—The form used for report is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings. This page (Page 1) is designed to supply identifying data, and Page 2 deals with financial data.)

PLEASE RETURN 1 ORIGINAL TO: THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, OFFICE OF RECORDS AND REGISTRATION, 1036 LONGWORTH HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20515

PLEASE RETURN 1 ORIGINAL TO: THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE, OFFICE OF PUBLIC RECORDS, 232 HART SENATE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20510

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER ______________________________

Is this an Amendment?
☐ YES ☐ NO

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER —State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."◆

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "NONE" in the space following the number.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

H.R. 33, DRUG TESTING QUALITY ACT

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague from Virginia [TOM BLILEY] in reintroducing H.R. 33, the Drug Testing Quality Act. This bill would amend the Public Health Service Act to establish standards for the certification of laboratories engaged in urine drug testing. It will also require drug testing programs to use only certified laboratories, and it will provide comprehensive and uniform regulation of the procedures and methods employed by those laboratories. Finally, it will ensure that the legitimate rights of all interested parties—the test subject, the laboratory, and the program itself—are appropriately protected.

The version of the bill we are introducing today represents a refinement and improvement of similar legislation we introduced in the 101st Congress, also bearing the number H.R. 33. Over the course of the last 3 years, since this issue came to the fore, we have held hearings in the Energy and Commerce Committee and conducted investigations of various drug testing problems brought to our attention. We have worked with the Department of Health and Human Services and with private sector laboratory organizations to help bridge the technical and scientific differences that have divided experts in this field. We have talked to dozens of labs, employers, labor organizations, equipment manufacturers, employee assistance professionals, and other interested parties to obtain comments on the original version of our bill.

H.R. 33 for the 102d Congress represents our best effort to take those comments into consideration, to take account of events in the professional sphere over the last 2 years that have impacted on this field, and still to maintain a fair balance among the interests of all concerned parties. We believe the legislation accomplishes those goals.

Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives has already spoken on this matter. During consideration of the comprehensive crime control bill on the floor last fall, Mr. BLILEY and I offered as an amendment to that bill the text of the original H.R. 33. It passed the House by a vote of 333 to 86, and it was supported by a majority of Members in each party. We would have liked the opportunity to incorporate in conference the changes reflected in the bill being introduced today. Unfortunately, the press of time at the end of the session and the process by which the crime bill was handled made that impossible.

Nonetheless, we were gratified by the broad show of bipartisan support for our amendment, and we are committed to bringing our efforts to fruition in the 102d Congress. Moreover, given the changes we have made in the bill, it should now be acceptable to an even broader range of interests.

It is important that we not allow discussion of the need for technical and scientific quality standards in drug testing to become muddied by arguments over when, whether, or under what circumstances drug testing can or should occur. These issues have absolutely nothing to do with one another, and H.R. 33 therefore steers clear of that thicket. Anyone who uses lab standards legislation as an excuse to get into the issue of testing itself serves only the interests of those irresponsible parties who would prefer for their own reasons that there be no standards legislation at all.

In fact, the argument over testing has become largely irrelevant as a genuine public policy question. Drug testing has become one of America's growth industries, and to the extent that any serious questions about the imposition of testing exist, they are either constitutional in nature—when can the Government order that tests be done—or a matter for management to work out with labor or resolve on its own. In a small handful of States, testing is restricted in various ways. But most of these State laws were passed in large measure to counter the perception that drug testing is administered unfairly and unreliably.

That perception, widespread in many quarters, remains largely unaddressed today, as does the unfortunate reality that too many players in this game do not know what they are doing. These perceptions will not abate until everyone in the United States—executives, professionals, managers, workers, Government agencies, athletes, social service organizations, and anyone else whose life drug testing has touched—gains confidence in the ability of the system appropriately to protect their livelihoods, careers, and reputations.

For more than 20 years, Mr. Speaker, ordinary medical laboratories have been regulated by the Federal Government and, although errors occur all too frequently, most Americans trust the results of the tests their doctors order. Not so with drug testing labs. While 14 States regulate these operations to one extent or another, the United States has no comprehensive, uniform regulation of the labs or the people who run them.

In fact, to the extent we have any regulation at all, the requirements imposed on the laboratories from States to State, agency to agency, and client to client often conflict, inviting confusion and error. The stigma of a positive result can attach to a test subject in many industries on the basis of a single unconfirmed test, scientifically insufficient to warrant any action. Employers often refuse to spend money for the professional review of lab results needed to make sure that bagel-eaters are not labeled heroin addicts or that dieters are not branded speed freaks.

Even when drug testing programs are administered in good faith, the sheer ignorance of those running the program can be astounding. In one instance investigated by our committee, a nuclear utility plant used its corporate medical officer to review drug test results. For the better part of 30 years, this gentleman practiced oral surgery; while on active naval reserve duty, he also developed a specialty in diving and hyperbaric medicine. But apart from a 1962 military correspondence course in clinical laboratory procedures, his 23-page résumé did not list any significant experience or training in the field of identifying drugs or drug abusers.

Several questions recur anywhere and anytime the specimen bottle is filled: Will a proper chain of custody be established at the point of specimen collection and be preserved throughout the process? Will a qualified lab analyze the specimens? Will the lab's analytical procedures ensure accuracy, integrity, and reliability of results? Will positive results be reviewed by a competent professional to avoid errors? Will appropriate confidentiality be maintained? Will persons harmed by errors have a fair opportunity for redress?

Those questions are not being addressed today in any comprehensive fashion. For that reason, we badly need uniform Federal regulation of drug testing laboratories and programs—not to dictate whether and under what circumstances testing can be done, but to ensure that when it is done, everyone can have confidence in the results.

H.R. 33 is designed to address these serious issues. It continues to use as a model the guidelines promulgated by HHS in 1988 to govern drug testing in the Federal workplace. However, it also provides for some significant departures from those guidelines to reflect the development of an expert consensus on many technical issues over the last 2 years. And it has been significantly refined in many other respects described more fully below.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend from Virginia [Mr. BLILEY] for his support, cooperation, and involvement in this effort. As I noted when we introduced this legislation together in the last Congress, we have put aside any differences we may have as to the utility and propriety of drug testing in various settings because we share a common goal—assuring that when drug testing is done, the results are reliable, accurate, and fair.

We will be seeking cosponsors again for H.R. 33 and plan to move the bill through our committee and to the floor at the earliest possible date. I hope that our colleagues will continue to support us on this important issue. I ask that a summary of the changes we have made in this version of the bill, together with a complete section-by-section analysis, be printed in the RECORD immediately following this statement.

H.R. 33, DRUG TESTING QUALITY ACT—SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT CHANGES IN 102D CONGRESS

Separates the lab certification program from the regulations governing scientific, technical, and procedural requirements applicable to labs.

Provides that with respect to the issues of lab inspection, the monitoring of lab performance, and the conduct of quality control and performance testing programs, the certification program shall be consistent with the recommendations embodied in the Spring 1990 NIDA Consensus Conference Report on Technical, Scientific, and Procedural Issues of Employee Drug Testing.

Requires that HHS establish criteria under which State agencies and private nonprofit accrediting bodies shall be recognized by the Secretary to certify laboratories in accordance with the requirements of the Act, independently or on HHS's behalf, with HHS oversight in either case.

Makes explicit the regulatory authority of HHS to expand the list of drugs specified in the 1988 HHS guidelines, directs inclusion on the list of barbiturates in CSA Schedules I and II, benzodiazepines, and anabolic steroids, and provides a petition process for other drugs.

Clarifies that regulations are not intended to address specimen collection procedures, but requires HHS to publish model procedures and provide technical advice and assistance with respect to proper specimen collection.

Provides that with respect to cutoff levels and certain blind performance testing requirements, the regulations shall be consistent with the recommendations embodied in the Spring 1990 NIDA Consensus Conference Report.

Ensures that no adverse action can be taken against a test subject where a confirmed positive result is not verified by a medical review officer because there exists a legitimate medical explanation for the result consistent with legal drug use or because the result is scientifically insufficient for further action.

Limits criminal penalties to persons performing drug testing urinalyses without the laboratory certification required under the Act.

Limits HHS enforcement responsibilities to laboratories, and provides authority to Attorney General to obtain injunctive relief against others who violate the requirements of the Act.

Clarifies that private right of action is available to address specified significant violations of the Act and not minor or technical deficiencies.

Adds contribution as an available remedy in third-party actions based on consequences of false positive results reported by laboratories, to ensure that labs are not held liable for all monetary sums where other parties may share responsibility for violations of a test subject's rights.

Clarifies that a State agency or private accrediting body recognized by HHS to grant certifications must certify any lab meeting HHS requirements under this Act, regardless of whether the lab would also meet additional requirements for that agency's or private body's own certification or accreditation.

Preempts State and local laws that permit or require any conduct prohibited by this Act.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF H.R. 33

(As Introduced January 3, 1991—102d Congress)

A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish standards for the certification of laboratories engaged in urine drug testing, and for other purposes

Section 1. Short Title

This Act may be cited as the "Drug Testing Quality Act".

Section 2. Standards for Certification of Laboratories Engaged in Drug Testing

This section adds to Title V of the Public Health Service Act a new Part E, titled "Drug Testing." The new Part E consists of new sections 551 through 559.

SECTION 551—CERTIFICATION PROGRAM

Subsection (a) of new section 551 requires that the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS), not later than one year after enactment, establish a program for the certification of laboratories performing toxicological urinalysis for drug testing programs. Except as provided in subsection (b), this certification program is required to conform, to the maximum extent practicable, to Subpart C of the existing HHS guidelines. Subpart C covers certification of laboratories seeking to perform federal workplace drug testing.

Subsection (b) provides that with respect to the issues of laboratory inspection, the monitoring of laboratory performance, and the conduct of quality control of performance testing programs, the certification program shall be consistent with the consensus of expert scientific and medical opinion on such matters. The determination of what constitutions that consensus is ultimately the Secretary's to make; however, the legislation contemplates that with respect to the issues covered by subsection (b), the Secretary, at least initially, will adopt the recommendations contained in the Consensus Report on Technical, Scientific, and Procedural Issues of Employee Drug Testing, published by the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration in the spring of 1990 (HHS Publication No. (ADM) 90-1684).

Subsection (c) requires that the certification program shall also: (1) provide that the Secretary, in considering applications for certification, shall consider whether the applicant has previously owned or operated a laboratory which has had its certification suspended or revoked; (2) include criteria under which the Secretary shall recognize State agencies and private, nonprofit accrediting bodies meeting such criteria to certify laboratories, or to act on the Secretary's behalf in certifying laboratories, in accordance with the requirements of this section; (3) require the Secretary to oversee and review the performance of any such agency or accrediting body recognized by the Secretary; and (4) ensure the Secretary's access to records necessary to the performance of such oversight and review.

Subsection (c) further provides that unless a laboratory engages solely in urine drug testing, the laboratory is required to be certified under the Clinical Laboratory Improvement Act (section 353 of the Public Health Service Act) in order to become certified under this section.

Subsection (d) directs the Secretary to revise the requirements of the certification program to reflect improvements in drug testing methods.

SECTION 552—PROVISIONS TO ENSURE INTEGRITY OF DRUG TESTING PROGRAMS

Subsection (a) of new section 552 requires that the Secretary, not later than one year after enactment, issue regulations to ensure the integrity of drug testing programs. Except as provided in subsection (b), these regulations are required to conform, to the maximum extent practicable, to Subpart B of the existing HHS guidelines. Subpart B covers scientific and technical requirements applicable to federal workplace drug testing.

Subsection (b) requires the regulations to: (1) treat any person conducting a drug testing program in the same manner as Subpart B of the HHS guidelines treats the federal agencies to which it is applicable, except as otherwise provided in this subsection; (2) expand the list of drugs and drug classes for which test methods and cutoff levels are provided under Subpart B to include barbiturates listed in CSA Schedules I and II, benzodiazepines, anabolic steroids, and such other drugs or drug classes as the Secretary determines under subsection (c) may be appropriate; (3) neither require nor prohibit the establishment of a drug testing program, and neither require any person to test nor prohibit any person from testing for any particular drug or class of drugs described in paragraph (2) or subpart B; (4) provide no specimen collection procedures other than those necessary to establish and maintain a proper chain of custody and to provide for transportation of specimens to the laboratory; (5) consistent with the consensus of expert medical and scientific opinion as determined on the Secretary (but based initially on the Consensus Report reference above), establish appropriate cutoff levels for each drug or class of drugs for both initial and confirmatory tests; (6) establish blind performance test procedures for drug testing programs, consistent with the consensus of expert medical and scientific opinion with respect to the number or percentage of specimens to be used for this purpose (based initially on the Consensus Report) and with the need to ensure accuracy, integrity, and protection of the interests of test subjects; (7) provide no interim certification procedures; and (8) allows access by any test subject to certain relevant records.

Although the regulations described above will neither require nor prohibit establishment of a drug testing program, neither require any person to test nor prohibit any person from testing for any particular drug or drug class, and provide no specimen collection procedures except with respect to chain of custody and transportation, subsection (b) contains a savings clause intended to ensure that the requirements of subpart B of the HHS guidelines dealing with these issues will continue to apply to drug testing programs conducted by Federal agencies under E.O. 12564.

Subsection (c) establishes a procedure by which the Secretary, following periodic notice and comment or on petition by an person, may expand the list of drugs and drug classes for which test methods and cutoff levels are prescribed under subsection (b)(2).

Subsection (d) permits the Secretary to take into consideration any special factors or circumstances applicable to the testing of participants in amateur athletic competition that warrant separate or different treatment under the regulations.

Subsection (e) directs the Secretary to revise the regulations issued under this section to reflect improvements in drug testing methods.

SECTION 553—SPECIMEN COLLECTION PROCEDURES

Subsection (a) of new section 553 directs the Secretary to issue model specimen collection procedures within one year after enactment for the guidance of drug testing programs other than those conducted by Federal agencies under E.O. 12564. The Secretary is authorized to provide technical assistance and to recommend alternative procedures to address the particular needs or circumstances of interested parties.

Subsection (b) is a savings provision ensuring that the specimen collection procedures contained in Subpart B of the HHS guidelines will continue to apply to drug testing programs conducted by Federal agencies under E.O. 12564.

SECTION 554—PROHIBITIONS

Subsection (a) of new section 554 prohibits any person from performing any toxicological urinalysis in connection with any drug testing program unless that person is laboratory certified under section 551.

Subsection (b) establishes several protections for test subjects by making it unlawful to engage in certain conduct, including breaching the confidentiality of test results (except in certain specified circumstances), knowingly altering or falsely reporting test results, knowingly adulterating urine specimens, knowingly performing or causing to be performed on a urine specimen a test for any medical condition or any substance other than drugs or alcohol without the consent of the person providing the specimen following full disclosure, taking adverse action against any test subject for refusing to give such consent, taking adverse action against any test subject based upon a positive result that has not been confirmed by gas chromatography/mass spectrometry, taking adverse action against any test subject based upon a test result that has not been verified as positive by a medical review officer for specified reasons, or otherwise knowingly failing to administer or conduct any urine drug test or testing program in accordance with the requirements of the certification program established under new section 551 or the regulations issued under section 552.

The prohibition on testing for any substance or medical condition other than drugs or alcohol without prior disclosure and consent is not intended to refer to tests for characteristics of a urine specimen that are integral to assuring the integrity of the drug test itself, such as tests for pH, specific gravity, or creatinine.

SECTION 555—SANCTIONS AND REMEDIES

Subsection (a) of new section 555 provides criminal penalties for any person performing a toxicological urinalysis in connection with any drug testing program who is not a laboratory certified under section 551.

Subsection (b) provides for civil penalties, to be assessed by the Secretary, on any laboratory performing a toxicological urinalysis in connection with any drug testing program that violates any regulation issued under section 552. The Secretary is required to refer violations committed by persons other than laboratories to the Attorney General for further investigation and appropriate action.

Subsection (c) authorizes the Secretary or Attorney General, as appropriate, or any aggrieved person, to bring actions in federal district court to restrain violations of section 554(a) or any regulation issued under section 552.

Subsection (d) authorizes any test subject who is tested, or whose test results are handled, in violation of, or is deprived of rights because of a violation under, section 554(a) or 554(b)(1)–(7), or who is adversely affected by a material breach in an applicable chain of custody under section 552, to bring a civil action in federal district court for appropriate legal and equitable relief, including employment, reinstatement, promotion, the payment of lost wages and benefits, and damages.

Subsection (e) authorizes an action to be brought against a laboratory to provide indemnification or contribution, as appropriate, by any person conducting a drug testing program who is found liable to a test subject because of adverse action taken against the test subject on the basis of a false positive result. It is important to note that the bill's definition of the term "false positive" has been written to avoid any implication that a medical review officer's verification of a true positive could result in a judgment for indemnification or contribution against a laboratory, even where that verification was improper. Thus, for example, a test subject who suffers adverse action after testing positive for opiates despite his explanation that the test result was based on consumption of poppy seed bagels might have a claim under the bill against the person conducting the drug testing program. However, if that person recovered damages, the defendant would not then have a claim against the laboratory under the bill for indemnification or contribution because the test result was not a "false positive" as defined in the bill.

SECTION 556—CONSTRUCTIONS

Subsection (a) of new section 556 permits test subjects and their representatives to contract for standards, procedures, or requirements more protective of test subjects then those provided under the certification program or under section 552. Similarly, this subsection provides that nothing in the new Part E limits the authority of the Secretry to permit an agency or accrediting body recognized by the Secretary to permit an agency or accrediting body recognized by the Secretary under section 551 to maintain standards, procedures, or requirements more protective of test subjects than those provided under the certification program or under section 552.

Subsection (b), however, prohibits an agency or accrediting body described above from denying certification under section 551 to any laboratory complying with the standards, procedures, and requirements established by the Secretary under section 551. Therefore, while a laboratory may not seek approval from such an agency or accrediting body recognized by the Secretary under that authority's own standards, the agency or accrediting body would be required to grant a section 551 certification to any laboratory meeting section 551's requirements.

Subsection (c) provides that new Part E shall supersede the HHS guidelines and any other relevant law to the extent that it imposes standards, procedures, or requirements more protective of test subjects.

SECTION 557—PREEMPTION

Subsection (a) of new section 557 prohibits States and local governments from adopting or enforcing any law relating to the certification of drug testing laboratories, or relating to requirements for the conduct of drug testing under the certification program, which is different from such certification program.

Subsection (b) prohibits any State or local government from adopting or enforcing any law that permits or requires any act prohibited by section 554.

SECTION 558—FEES

New section 558 establishes a system of certification fees to ensure that this Act will be budget-neutral. The fees are authorized to be used, subject to appropriations, to administer the program, regulations, and activities provided for in the Act.

SECTION 559—DEFINITIONS

New section 559 defines the following terms: blank specimen, controlled substance, drug, drug testing program, false positive result, person, performance testing, spiked specimen, test subject, and toxicological urinalysis.

Section 3. Effective Date

Except as specified below, the provisions of the bill would take effect on the date of enactment. The prohibitions on (1) the use of a non-certified laboratory, (2) the disclosure of test results by a person involved in drug testing or a drug testing program, and (3) the administration or conduct of any drug test or drug testing program except in accordance with the requirements of the certification program under section 551 or the regulations issued under section 552, would not take effect for one year following the establishment of the certification program under section 551.

INTRODUCTION OF H.R. 33

HON. THOMAS J. BLILEY, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to join the gentleman from Michigan, the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, Mr. DINGELL, in introducing H.R. 33, the Drug Testing Quality Act. This legislation is similar to legislation we introduced in the last Congress which bore the same number.

While similar to last Congress' H.R. 33 in many respects, this new legislation contains many significant changes which are a direct result of testimony received at the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment's hearing on H.R. 33. It also attempts to address some of the concerns of business and labor groups which were raised during numerous meetings on this subject. Since the gentleman from Michigan has addressed many of these changes in his statement, I will not discuss them in detail.

As in the last Congress, this legislation is premised on the belief that individuals who undergo drug testing are entitled to have such tests analyzed by laboratories that meet reasonable quality standards.

The legislation this year as in the last Congress is based on a couple of key principles. First, this amendment neither encourages nor discourages drug testing. It does not address under what circumstances drug testing is or is not appropriate. The existing right of an employer to remove from the job an employee who may be impaired would not be affected. The bill does prohibit an employer from taking adverse action against an employee based on a positive screen that has not been proven by a confirmatory test.

The employer is not prohibited from taking action against an impaired employee provided such action is not based on an unconfirmed drug test. Thus, the bill preserves the right of employers to get impaired employees out of safety sensitive jobs immediately, following which the employer may pursue its usual procedures with respect to future employment.

Second, this legislation is based on the belief that drug testing must be conducted according to realistic standards that ensure that laboratories will analyze the tests accurately. We all know the potential for ruining lives and reputations based on faulty drug tests.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is not perfect. We have met with representatives of many industry and labor groups that have suggested possible improvements to last Congress' legislation. We have attempted to incorporate many of those concerns into this legislation. We are anxious to work with all interested parties to pass reasonable and responsible drug testing legislation.

I urge my colleagues to join in cosponsoring this important legislation.

FEDERAL CUSTODIAL RESPONSIBILITY ACT OF 1991

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to reintroduce the Federal Custodial Responsibility Act. This bill would release Federal agencies from Superfund liability whenever they buy collateral at a foreclosure sale in order to hold the property in a custodial manner for resale. This would remedy a situation where Federal agencies, exercising their legitimate fiduciary responsibilities, are being held responsible for cleanup costs for environmental hazards they had no part in creating.

The Federal Custodial Responsibility Act amends section 101(20)(A)(iii) of CERCLA to exempt Federal agencies, departments, or instrumentalities from the definition of owner or operator for purposes of liability whenever title or control is conveyed due to bankruptcy, foreclosure, tax delinquency, or abandonment. I am pleased to say that two of my distinguished small business colleagues, ANDY IRELAND and IKE SKELTON, are joining me in reintroducing this critical legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this problem first came to my attention in 1989 when the Small Business Committee held a hearing on Superfund liability and its impact on small business financing. A key panelist at that hearing was Sally B. Narey, General Counsel, U.S. Small Business Administration who discussed the problems CERCLA created for the SBA, indeed for all Federal agencies. My bill, The Federal Custodial Responsibility Act is a direct result of her testimony. Her testimony addressed the problem directly and succintly, and I enclose a copy of her remarks for the RECORD. I urge all my colleagues to join me and ANDY IRELAND and IKE SKELTON in cosponsoring the Federal Custodial Responsibility Act of 1991.

STATEMENT OF SALLY B. NAREY, GENERAL COUNSEL, U.S. SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS, U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, AUGUST 3, 1989

I want to thank the Committee for the opportunity to address the issues raised by Chairman LaFalce in his recent letter to Administrator Engeleiter. At the request of the Administrator, it is my privilege, as General Counsel of SBA, to appear before this Committee today on behalf of the Agency. The focus of this hearing is of great interest. The Small Business Administration has heard from small businesses about the problems which have arisen for them and their lending institutions under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980, or, as it is more commonly known, CERCLA or Superfund. They have also expressed complaints about similar problems created by other related Federal laws, and by numerous environmental statutes which have been adopted by the states. These problems are of significance to SBA because they directly impact upon our programs of financial assistance to small businesses. It is clear that solutions to these problems are urgently needed.

IMPLICATIONS FOR LENDERS AND SMALL BUSINESSES

Under Section 107(a) of CERCLA, among those persons who may be held to be liable for the cleanup costs of a hazardous waste site, are the owner or operator of that site. The application of that provision in the lending context has caused such concern among lenders to small businesses that it has diminished their interest in making financing available. It has resulted in a growing reluctance by lenders to extend loans to small businesses out of the fear that if a small business should fail, and its lender take possession of the debtor's assets through foreclosure, settlement, or a bankruptcy proceeding, the lender, as an "owner" under CERCLA, is likely to be required to bear the costs of any necessary environmental cleanup.

Because of this potential liability, a prudent lender will often request an environmental audit of the potential borrower's property upon submission of a loan application. This can cost several thousand dollars. Small businesses, certainly those seeking SBA financial assistance, generally do not have sufficient funds to incur the cost of such audits and may be deprived of the opportunity for financing. On the other hand, if lenders finance these audits, it is likely that interest rates on loans to small businesses will rise to offset the cost. If this should occur, some otherwise creditworthy small businesses may simply not be able to bear the costs of higher periodic loan payments and, as a result, may not be able to afford financing.

Additionally, small businesses, especially fledgling enterprises, are likely to benefit from their lender's financial and entrepreneurial advice after a loan has been made. The lenders also want to keep an eye on such businesses. Yet, out of concern that they may be viewed as participating in the day-to-day operation of the borrower to such a degree as to be considered an owner or operator liable under CERCLA, lenders may determine that it is best not to offer advice to inexperienced small businesses. If unable to protect their investments, these lenders may simply decide not to extend financing.

Finally, many small businesses have little collateral beyond land, buildings, machinery and equipment. But those are the very items of collateral most likely to be tainted if hazardous waste is, or becomes, present on the property. Once again, a lender may seek to avoid involvement in a loan to a small business for fear that the collateral obtained to secure such a loan is likely to become tainted and, ultimately, become valueless or give rise to cleanup costs should the lender take ownership of the collateral. As you are aware, cleanup liability can be imposed without any degree of fault on the part of the lender. This potential outcome may be sufficient to dissuade many lenders from ever getting involved in loans to small businesses.

IMPLICATIONS FOR SBA

If a small business cannot obtain a loan from a bank, it may seek an SBA-guaranteed or direct loan. SBA itself does not have the expertise or funds to conduct environmental audits to determine the propriety of Agency involvement in a particular loan transaction. Similarly, if a participating lender asks SBA to honor its guaranty and buy its share of a guaranteed loan, SBA has no ability to determine if the bank has acted prudently in its treatment of environmental issues. Nor is SBA able to discern if the collateral for the loan has become tainted during the life of the loan. Finally, we note that at least one court case has raised the issue of potential cleanup liability as a result of advice provided a borrower by SBA employees.

SBA is currently faced with potential cleanup liability once it buys in collateral at a foreclosure sale upon default of an SBA borrower. When SBA honors a guaranty the collateral for the loan is assigned by the lender to SBA and either the Agency or the lender, acting at the request of the Agency, proceeds to liquidate the collateral. When SBA liquidates a direct loan it proceeds on its own with respect to its collateral. Often it is deemed appropriate by SBA that it buy in collateral at foreclosure in order to hold the property in a custodial manner for future resale in order to minimize the government's loss on the default.

Under CERCLA and other similar laws, it is possible that such buy ins by SBA may make it the owner of the subject property and, as a result, potentially liable for cleanup costs. Even though the SBA is a government lending agency, mandated to become involved in risky loans, mandated to attempt to minimize the government's loss upon a borrower's default, and certainly not motivated by profit, SBA may be found to be a party responsible for Superfund cleanup costs.

SBA does not buy in property for the purpose of building up a portfolio. SBA does not hold property for proprietary reasons. SBA takes possession of collateral and holds it in a custodial manner in an effort to secure a later recovery for the government. SBA attempts to sell such bought in property as quickly as possible.

Mr. Chairman, the problems I have outlined are very real. SBA is presently finding itself involved in hazardous waste sites around the country as a result of its loan programs. In one situation, where SBA obtained collateral through foreclosure, we are now being sued by a state environmental agency. SBA now faces the possibility of spending unknown amounts of money for site cleanups simply because of foreclosure actions taken to minimize the government's loss following the default of a small business borrower. We have apprised EPA of our concerns, and we are pleased to have the opportunity to express them to you today.

This concludes my prepared remarks. I will be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

INTRODUCTION OF THE MERCHANT MARINERS FAIRNESS ACT OF 1991

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to introduce on this the first day of the new 102d Congress the Merchant Mariners Fairness Act of 1991. I am also pleased that several of our colleagues have joined with me in this important effort.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this legislation is twofold. First, it will correct a major injustice that has been perpetrated on thousands of Americans who proudly served in our U.S. merchant marine during World War II.

And, second, it will clarify the intent of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 to ensure that our cargo preference laws are fairly and accurately enforced.

Let me describe why it is essential that Congress enact this legislation.

While it is now more than 40 years since the end of World War II, there are still many Americans who served in the U.S. merchant marine who have not received any recognition or benefits for the vital role they played in that conflict.

Unlike their brothers in uniform, America's merchant seamen came home to no ticker-tape parades. They came home to no celebration. In fact, little, if anything, was said about the contributions they made to defeating the Axis powers, keeping Europe and Asia free, and preserving our freedom here in the United States. Worst, these merchant seamen came home to none of the benefits enjoyed by the men and women who served America in uniform.

Mr. Speaker, we know that 270,000 merchant seamen helped deliver troops and war material to every Allied invasion site from Guadalcanal to Omaha Beach. They also transported our troops back home to the United States and, when that task was completed, they carried food and medicine to millions of the world's starving people. The price they paid to keep us free was high: 733 U.S. merchant ships were destroyed; 6,632 seamen were killed, and 609 merchant mariners were taken as prisoners of war. Indeed, their casualty rate was only one-tenth of 1 percent lower than our Marine Corps, which experienced the highest casualty rate of any branch of the military services.

President Franklin Roosevelt noted that our merchant mariners were men who "returned to their jobs at sea again and again, because they realized that the lifelines to our battlefront would be broken if they did not carry out their vital part in this global war."

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, commenting after the Normandy invasion in 1944, said that: "When final victory is ours, there is no organization that will share its credit more deservedly than the merchant marine."

Gen. Douglas MacArthur emphatically stated that: "They have contributed tremendously to our success. I hold no branch in higher esteem than the merchant marine service."

Finally, Adm. Chester Nimitz said that: "Without these merchant ships wholly devoted to winning the war, our substantial progress would not have been possible."

Mr. Speaker, despite these well-deserved accolades, unfortunately, our merchant seamen became the forgotten patriots of World War II.

While there have been attempts over the past 40 years to legislatively provide veterans status to these merchant seamen, each of those efforts failed.

A prominent advocate of such legislation was Congressman Thomas Joseph Lane of Massachusetts. In fact, on October 8, 1945, Congressman Lane made one of the most eloquent statements on behalf of our World War II merchant mariners. Congressman Lane noted that: "Men of the merchant marine were the first to fight and the first to die. They, above all others, saved England when she stood alone against Nazi aggression and was but a few weeks away from the starvation which meant certain defeat. In those dark days the merchant marine was our last and only hope."

"Theirs was a constant, nerve-wracking vigil against enemy ambush that was frequent, swift and deadly. Many ships went down with many men. But the lines never faltered. Their war service, constantly exposed to enemy action, was indispensable to victory."

Mr. Speaker, Congressman Lane was absolutely correct in his assessment. These men paid a tremendous price in fighting for us, but have been forgotten by us.

It is also significant to remember that in October 1941, President Roosevelt asked the Congress to enact legislation to lift the ban on arming merchant ships. Less than 1 month later, Congress approved such legislation.

In addition, President Roosevelt issued an Executive order establishing the War Shipping Administration [WSA] on February 7, 1942, as a civilian Federal agency within the Executive Office of the President. By that order, all of the functions, duties and powers conferred upon the U.S. Maritime Commission with respect to the operation and requisition of vessels were transferred to the WSA. In short, our merchant seamen became employees of the United States.

With that background, we move forward to October 2, 1987, a day which will long be remembered by all World War II merchant seamen. On that day, U.S. District Court Judge Louis S. Oberdorfer declared that the Pentagon's previous decisions to reject veterans status for World War II merchant seamen were "arbitrary and capricious and—not supported by substantial evidence."

As a result of this landmark court decision, then Secretary of the Air Force Edward C. Aldridge, Jr., issued a statement on January 19, 1988, which stipulated that service of the "American merchant marine and oceangoing service during the period of armed conflict, December 7, 1941, to August 15, 1945" should be considered active duty for purposes of all laws administered by the Veterans' Administration.

While I am pleased that our Government has granted veterans status to some of our forgotten merchant mariners, the Secretary's decision to exclude those seamen who did not have an oceangoing voyage prior to August 15, 1945, is unjustified and cruel.

By establishing a so-called "period of armed conflict," the Secretary has made a flawed decision which has no basis in law. The term "period of armed conflict" does not appear in Judge Oberdorfer's 34-page decision and there is no documentation, no evidence and no justification for the August 15, 1945, date.

By selecting these dates, Secretary Aldridge has unfairly penalized thousands of Americans who served in our Nation's merchant marine during 1945 and 1946.

Based on discussion with the U.S. Coast Guard, there are three categories of merchant mariners who are adversely affected by Secretary Aldridge's decision. These include: those who served in the U.S. merchant marine before August 15, 1945, but did not have any oceangoing voyages prior to that date; those merchant seamen who were in military training on August 15, 1945; and those who were inducted into the merchant marine after August 15, 1945.

Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that there are over 3,000 merchant seamen whose applications for veterans status have been rejected by the Coast Guard because of Secretary Aldridge's decision.

While I have been contacted by a number of them, each shared the common characteristic of love of country and a commitment to serve during one of the most difficult periods in our Nation's history.

Most of these men could have, because of their young age, simply chosen to avoid service during World War II. However, they chose not to and we must not, even in this late hour, forget them.

Mr. Speaker, let me tell you why all merchant mariners who served between December 7, 1941, and December 31, 1946, should be granted veterans status. They have earned that right for the following reasons:

First, the War Shipping Administration [WSA] was in control of all ship movements far beyond the arbitrary date of August 15, 1945. In fact, the WSA did not go out of existence until August 31, 1946. Until that time, these merchant mariners traveled under sealed orders on ships which were under the direct military control of the U.S. Navy.

Mr. Speaker, those ships were not taking pleasure cruises. They were transporting desperately needed supplies, including medicine, to countries that had been devastated by war. The ships and their crews traveled through heavily mined waters, like the Mediterranean Sea, and on more than one occasion merchant ships were sunk by mines.

In fact, there were at least 11 U.S. merchant vessels damaged or lost after August 15, 1945. One of those was the SS Jesse Billingsley, which was hit by a mine off the coast of Trieste, Yugoslavia, on November 19, 1945. One U.S. merchant mariner lost his life in that explosion.

In addition, we must remember that for the U.S. merchant marine, the war did not end on August 15, 1945. Defense shipping actually increased after that date to 1,200 sailings in December, 1945, as compared to the World War II monthly peak of 800.

Second, while the Japanese indicated their desire to surrender on August 15, 1945, the situation facing the U.S. merchant marine did not radically change on that date. In fact, I have a copy of a telegram sent on August 15, 1945, by the U.S. Naval Pacific Command which states that "for all merchant vessels in the Pacific Ocean areas, Japan has surrendered. Pending further orders, all existing instructions regarding defense, security, and control of merchant shipping are to remain in force. Merchant ships at sea, whether in convoy or sailing independently, are to continue their voyages."

Third, it was not until December 31, 1946, that President Harry Truman declared in a press conference that he was issuing Proclamation 2714, which states that "although a state of war still exists, it is at this time possible to declare, and I find it in the public interest to declare, that hostilities have terminated."

Fourth, it was not until January 1, 1947, that the U.S. Coast Guard was returned to the Treasury Department from the Department of the Navy.

Mr. Speaker, this is further evidence that World War II was not over on August 15, 1945, since the Coast Guard Act of 1915 unambiguously declares that "the Coast Guard shall constitute a part of the military forces of the United States and shall operate as a part of the Navy in time of war."

And, finally and most importantly, all of our Federal laws that affect those who served during the World War II period use the date December 31, 1946.

Mr. Speaker the August 15, 1945, date simply has no basis in law. In fact, the overwhelming preponderance of evidence suggests that the correct and only relevant date is December 31, 1946.

Although I do not question the motives of the Secretary of the Air Force, justice demands that Congress finish the job which Secretary Aldridge began. That is the key purpose of this legislation: to extend veterans status to all merchant mariners who served our country's war effort between December 7, 1941, and December 31, 1946.

While our merchant seamen received letters, ribbons, and other citations for their outstanding service, they are entitled to more than just these tokens of service. They deserve not only our respect, but they deserve to be treated in exactly the same manner as all other World War II veterans.

The second purpose of this important legislation is to amend the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 to ensure that our cargo preference laws are interpreted to include components or ingredients of equipment, materials, commodities, or supplies that are required to be shipped on U.S.-flag vessels.

Unfortunately, there have been certain instances in recent years where Government agencies have attempted to circumvent the intent of our cargo preference laws by creatively finding ways, like excluding components, to avoid implementing them.

Mr. Speaker, the single purpose of our cargo preference laws is to guarantee that a certain percentage of our Government cargo is transported on U.S.-flag vessels. These are not ambiguous or confusing statutes and the purpose of my legislation is to remove any lingering confusion about what is covered by our cargo preference laws.

Frankly, I do not view this amendment to the Merchant Marine Act as a significant modification but simply a clarification of what Congress had always intended would be covered by this act.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time I have introduced the Merchant Mariners Fariness Act. In fact, this proposal is virtually identical to H.R. 44, which I proposed in the previous Congress, and which was unanimously adopted by the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee on two separate occasions.

In addition, this legislation has been cosponsored by a number of our colleagues in the House and it has received the enthusiastic support of thousands of Americans.

The only difference in the bill I am introducing today and the one reported by the Merchant Marine Committee is the incorporaton of a new section which would require those seeking veterans status to pay a one-time processing fee of $30. This is in response to information provided by the Coast Guard which has indicated it cost them $30 to review an application for veteran status. In short, my bill would eliminate any administrative costs involved in implementing this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, after more than 40 years, it is time we gave these merchant marine patriots the recognition they have long deserved.

While I am pleased to reintroduce this legislation and would like to thank our colleagues, HELEN BENTLEY, NORM LENT, GREG LAUGHLIN, JIM SAXTON, HARLEY STAGGERS, JOHN RHODES, DEAN GALLO, ED FEIGHAN, BILL HUGHES, JOHN MILLER, BILL RICHARDSON, and OWEN PICKETT for joining with me in this effort, I hope we can soon enact this bill into law so that these individuals can live out the rest of their lives in dignity.

Mr. Speaker, now is the time for Congress to approve the Merchant Mariners Fairness Act of 1991.

A TRIBUTE TO ELAINE WYNN

HON. JAMES H. BILBRAY

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a woman who is not only a credit to the Las Vegas community, but has greatly enhanced the lives of the hundreds of children she has come into contact with. I speak of Elaine Wynn.

These words come on the eve of a very special occasion. On January 10, 1991, the elementary school on Edna Avenue, in the city of Las Vegas, will be officially dedicated as the Elaine Wynn Elementary School. This is a well deserved honor for a woman of the caliber of Elaine Wynn.

A native of New York City and a graduate of George Washington University, Mrs. Wynn has not only excelled as a wife and mother but also in business, cultural and service roles within the Las Vegas community. She holds positions ranging from director of Golden Nugget, Inc., and the Nathan Adelson Hospice to former cochairperson of the United Way Campaign and board member of the Nevada Institute for Contemporary Art. She has been honored as the 1984 Woman of the Year by the Nevada Dance Theater and received the Easter Seals Silver Lilly Award for her charitable work in the community.

Yet, every Friday, she takes time out of her busy schedule to spend the afternoon with the children of her namesake school. Whether it is eating with the children, helping in the physical education classes, or teaching them how to dance, she has become an integral part of the school community. She has donated thousands of dollars in books and educational materials to the school. In addition, she has become concerned with improving efforts to motivate students with low self-esteem.

Whether it be in the classroom or in the community at large, Elaine Wynn has been a benefactor to the children and the community of Las Vegas. The dedication of the Elaine Wynn Elementary School is a richly deserved honor for this outstanding woman. It is my hope that others will follow in her example and continue to show us how much of a difference we can truly make in our communities.

PLASTIC CONTAINER IDENTIFICATION ACT OF 1991

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation that I sponsored during the 101st Congress and which is aimed at improving the ability to recycle plastic containers by establishing a national marking and coding identification system for plastic resins.

I believe the need to expand the recycling of plastic products is clear: plastics constitute the most rapidly growing segment of the national solid waste stream. As we address the current solid waste crisis, and at a time when one-third of all landfills will close within several years, recycling of plastics and other products is a key ingredient toward a comprehensive Federal program designed to assist States and local governments.

Such a coding system, first proposed by the plastics industry, has already been adopted by several States, and many additional States, including Maine, are now also studying the merits of such a system. By requiring such a coding system for plastic containers on a national level, this legislation will facilitate an expansion in the volume of plastic products, and in the reuse of plastic resins by manufacturers.

The Plastic Container Identification Act imposes a simple identification system, which the plastics industry would be required to adopt by January 1, 1993. Other basic provisions of this bill are as follows:

All plastic containers sold must be marked with a molded symbol, identifying its resin content, to ease separation for recycling.

Six easy-to-read marking symbols would be used, covering most of the plastic containers now in wide use.

Violators would be penalized under the rules for food established by the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

The Environmental Protection Agency must submit a report to Congress within 6 months on: First, a promotion and education plan to support this coding system, and the recyclability of plastics of all kinds and; second, recommendations on policies to reduce the amount of nonrecyclable and nonbiodegradable plastic used in the manufacture of plastic used in the manufacture of plastic products.

The annual volume of plastics entering the municipal solid waste stream is growing at an alarming rate, from a level of 800 million pounds in 1960 to over 21 billion pounds today. The use of plastic resin products has grown during this same time period from a level of 6.3 billion pounds to an estimated 57 billion pounds.

Growing public concern about the prevalent use of plastic packaging and their effect on the environment necessitates a more sensible use of plastics, starting with efforts to greatly expand their recyclability. Today, over 20 percent of plastic soda bottles are already recycled. Expanding this level to make recycling economically viable for most other plastic containers can be accomplished, but requires large quantities of plastics that are homogeneous by resin type.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to cosponsor and support the Plastic Container Identification Act, as one important remedy to our national problem with solid wastes.

INTRODUCTION OF THE COMPREHENSIVE LONG-TERM CARE INCENTIVES ACT OF 1991

HON. JOHN J. RHODES III

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing my Comprehensive Long-Term Care Incentives Act of 1991, to promote a private-public partnership to stimulate the long-term care market.

In the larger debate over health care, long-term care has quickly become a costly and compelling concern for everyone. Older Americans and their children fear becoming destitute and demoralized by a disabling illness. Long-term care policy requires incentives and options to succeed, not another ill-conceived bureaucratic entitlement program. Planning ahead for the possible expenses of chronic care must become a customary rite of aging.

I wrote an article for the December, 1990 issue of Chief Financial Officer [CFO] magazine describing the public-private partnership long-term care concept embodied in my legislation (H.R. 5090). In response to that article, a life insurance planning manager in Portland, OR, wrote in a letter to Senator MARK HATFIELD and others as follows:

ROBERT HEESTAND & ASSOCIATES,
Portland, OR, December 6, 1990.

Re: H.R. 5090—Long Term Care Insurance.
Senator MARK HATFIELD,
Hart Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HATFIELD: I am writing today in response to the enclosed article about Long Term Care Insurance written by Rep. John T. Rhodes III. This proposal is on the cutting edge of progressive federal policy and should be viewed in a serious and thoughtful manner.

There is ample evidence that this will not go away. An incentive approach makes more sense than a costly and inefficient addition to the Medicare program. There is ample evidence as well that employer sponsored benefits, even when provided on a voluntary basis, are widely accepted by the general public.

You have an opportunity to craft a piece of legislation today that could perhaps head off a collision with the growing numbers of the elder population who will demand that the Federal Government take care of this problem through the entitlement system.

The insurance industry is ready to play an active role in this. Our informal research has shown that people are concerned and interested in addressing the issue. Let's solve this problem now with a partnership of the private and public sectors

Sincerely,

WILLIAM J. HEESTAND.

Mr. Speaker, my legislation responds to the near-universal desire of frail and chronically ill persons to remain in familiar surroundings, with control over their lives, whenever possible. This bill shifts the institutional bias of Medicare and Medicaid, as well as private long-term care policies, by providing incentives for utilizing home and community-based care.

I congratulate the Congress in working toward reform in this area by restoring Medicare mammography screening, extending in-home respite care, expanding hospice care, instituting stronger Medigap insurance fraud and abuse penalties and a Medigap consumer hotline, and for providing home intravenous drug therapy benefits as part of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act [OBRA] of 1990.

Those were important steps forwarded toward meaningful LTC. But, frankly, more needs to be done. Private insurance companies and businesses have shown their willingness to become actively involved in long-term care. My legislation provides needed incentives that would promote the development of responsive and thoughtful long-term policies.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this important legislation. The following is a description of the legislation I am introducing today:

RHODES "COMPREHENSIVE LONG-TERM CARE INCENTIVES ACT OF 1991"

(Background and Explanation, January 3, 1991)

This bill is a modified version of H.R. 5090, the "Comprehensive Long-Term Incentives Act of 1990", which Congressman Rhodes introduced in the 101st Congress.

Several LTC provisions contained H.R. 5090 were subsequently incorporated in identical or similar form in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (OBRA) of 1990 (H.R. 5835/P.L. 101-508), and the National Affordable Housing Act (S. 566/P.L. 101-625).

The portions of H.R. 5090 included in OBRA '90 are:

Restore Medicare Mammography Screening.

Extend In-home Respite Care.

Expand Hospice Care.

Reimbursement for Certain Intravenous Drug Therapy Services.

Medigap Insurance Fraud and Abuse Protections/"Hotline".

The portion of Rhodes' H.R. 5090 which was incorporated in the National Affordable Housing Act of 1990 was:

Concept of Reverse Mortgage which could be used to help acquire LTC insurance coverage (Demonstration Project).

Congressman Rhodes was pleased that many of these important LTC related provisions which were included in his original H.R. 5090, were subsequently incorporated in the Reconciliation and Housing bills. Those are important steps forward. However, more remains to be accomplished to provide further incentives for the development of and purchase of much needed LTC for seniors and others who find themselves burdened with unforeseen and financially devastating health care challenges.

The modified Rhodes LTC incentives bill which is being introduced today, is essentially identical to H.R. 5090, except for the provisions that have already become law.

The following provisions are included in the "Comprehensive Long-Term Care Incentives Act of 1991".

TITLE I—TAX TREATMENT OF LONG-TERM CARE (LTC) INSURANCE PLANS

Treatment of LTC Insurance

A. Amends the Internal Revenue Code (IRC) to treat qualified LTC insurance the same as accident and health insurance for purposes of tax deductions on individual income tax returns.

B. Allows employers under the IRC to offer employees qualified LTC insurance as a tax-free fringe benefit. The employer contribution would be deductible.

C. Excludes from gross income amounts withdrawn from Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs) or 401(k) Plans for purposes of purchasing qualified LTC insurance.

D. Allows the non-taxable exchange of life insurance policies for qualified LTC insurance.

Employer Funding of Medical Benefits

A. Encourages companies to establish health benefit accounts for retirees and their spouses and dependents. Provides a tax deduction for the employers' contributions to the accounts.

B. Defines funded reserve accounts and vesting requirements to qualify for tax deduction of premiums paid, including special rules (excise tax) on allocated assets not used to provide retiree health benefits.

Reverse Mortgage Insurance for Older Americans

A. Technical amendment to the National Housing Act's home equity conversion mortgage insurance demonstration project providing that the long-term care insurance purchased cannot exceed 95% of the cost of a median priced single family home (as determined by the Secretary of health and Human Services).

Income Tax Credits

A. Provides a $2000 refundable credit for custodial care of certain dependents in the taxpayer's home.

B. Allows a taxpayer to receive a refundable credit for expenses for LTC services provided to certain independent persons requiring such care. This is a credit against tax imposed in the amount equal to 25% of the qualified LTC expenses, not exceeding $2000, but only permitted for those below 150% of the proverty level.

TITLE II—FEDERAL NATIONAL LONG-TERM REINSURANCE CORPORATION

A. The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall authorize the incorporation of the Federal LTC Reinsurance Corporation, which will have a Board of Directors consisting of nine persons; three appointed by the President of the United States, and six elected annually by the stockholders.

B. The Corporation shall provide for the reinsurance of insurance companies for extraordinary loss in the payment of benefits for qualified LTC insurance. Exempts the Corporation from State regulation and tax liability for the purposes of stimulating the private LTC insurance market. The Corporation shall terminate after 10 years.

IN HONOR OF FRANK B. CAPONE OF HOLMES, PA

HON. CURT WELDON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Frank B. Capone, who on the 15th of this month will be installed as the 68th State president of the Pennsylvania Association of Realtors.

Mr. Capone has been active in the real estate business for over 30 years. As a member of the Delaware County Board of Realtors, he chaired or served on every committee of the board, one of which received a commendation from Governor Thornburg in May 1981 for its program to fight alcohol and drug abuse. His dedication led him to the position of board president in 1981 and realtor of the year in 1982.

Mr. Capone has served his fellow Pennsylvania realtors well and is most deserving of this recognition and honor. His chairmanship of the Standard Forms Committee and his service as vice president in 1984 and 1985 were invaluable to the continued growth and strength of the Pennsylvania Association of Realtors.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Capone has brought guidance and leadership to the realtors of Pennsylvania and will continue to do so as he assumes the presidency of this outstanding organization. I am proud to join with nearly 30,000 Pennsylvania realtors in paying tribute to this exceptional man and extending my best wishes to him.

CONGRESS' REAFFIRMATION OF THE SECOND AMENDMENT

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, today I have once again introduced legislation to reaffirm congressional support for the second amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Because this year is the bicentennial of the Bill of Rights, I feel it is imperative that we reaffirm our belief in the rights that all Americans are entitled to under the Constitution. The purpose of this legislation is to ensure that our Founding Fathers' intentions in creating the second amendment remain intact.

The second amendment states: "A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed." It would be a grave injustice to compromise or surrender the rights to which our Founding Fathers dedicated their lives. There are few issues in this country that are more emotional or less understood than an individual's right to keep and bear arms, and it is disheartening to see any erosion of these rights when the framers of our Constitution clearly intended to guarantee an individual's freedom to protect himself. Our criminal justice system has far higher priorities, especially given the excessive Federal budget deficit, than to spend its time and money depriving people of the right to use a gun for hunting, target shooting, and lawfully protecting themselves against trespass.

We must reject any attempts to restrict American citizens from defending themselves and their property. Any erosion of this right is a severe threat to one of our basic freedoms as citizens of the United States. Currently police protection is reactive and is only guaranteed in broad terms. Since the U.S. criminal justice system has obviously not demonstrated the ability to provide adequate public safety, we simply cannot in all good conscience prevent individuals from protecting themselves.

Let us face the facts—guns do not kill people, people kill people. An inanimate object should not be blamed for the crime of a human. After all, do we blame the automobile or the driver in a hit-and-run accident?

Criminals will have access to guns no matter what we legislate. It is the innocent, law-abiding citizen that is victimized by gun control legislation for he then becomes easy prey for criminals. Instead, criminals should be given harsher mandatory sentences when commiting a crime with a gun. I suggest that States implement "Use a gun, go to prison" and other similiar legislation to punish those who abuse their second amendment right by commiting crimes with a gun.

In the year of bicentennial of the Bill of Rights, I commend to my colleagues a column included in the November 13 issue of the Washington Post, in hopes that it serve as a reminder of the purpose of the second amendment to the Constitution. Moreover, I urge my colleagues to consider cosponsoring my resolution in order to put Congress on record that it will unphold our second amendment rights.

The Right To Keep Firearms

(By Michael K. McCabe)

Former Nixon administration solicitor general Erwin Griswold indulged a slashing attack on the Second Amendment's right to keep and bear arms [op-ed, Nov. 4]. Sparing few invectives, he dismisses it as a "phantom right" posing "no barrier to strong gun laws."

Griswold's truculence is not well taken; indeed, he would be well-advised to consider remedial instruction on the Bill of Rights. His implausible "analysis," which relies upon one Supreme Court case that is on point—and two cases that decidedly are not—reflects weak legal scholarship and a thinly veiled rationalization of an emotional, unreasoning aversion to the private ownership of firearms.

History, clearly anathema to Griswold's analysis, dictates a contrary conclusion. William Blackstone, in his classic treatise on the common law, recognized that the right to keep arms for the purpose of self-defense was a "primary law of nature" that could not be "taken away by the law of society." The right to keep arms for this purpose was considered basic by the drafters of the Bill of Rights. Under the Ninth Amendment, such rights at common law were preserved. Thus, the keeping of private arms for self-defense exists independent of the Second Amendment.

The Second Amendment served two additional purposes. First, the militia, in addition to its utility for purposes of defense, would also serve as a counter-balance to the distrusted standing army. What was the "militia"? George Mason, one of the fathers of the Bill of Rights, reflected the common contemporary understanding of the term when he said that it consisted simply of "the whole people."

The Second Amendment also served the higher purpose of ensuring that the people would remain armed and resistant to tyranny. Thomas Jefferson's famous observation that the "tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants" merely suggests a commonly held belief. The language that would support Griswold's interpretation was suggested by Roger Sherman and specifically rejected by the drafters.

Griswold's sweeping dismissal of those scholars the conclude that the Second Amendment confers an individual right would surely surprise anyone who has read "The Right to Keep and Bear Arms," a report of the subcommittee on the Constitution of the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee (1982), which stated: "The conclusion is thus inescapable that the history, concept and wording of the Second Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, as well as its interpretation by every major commentator and court in the first half-century after its ratification, indicated that what is protected is an individual right of a private citizen to own and carry firearms in a peaceful manner."

The one case in this century squarely decided on the Second Amendment, the 1939 Supreme Court case of United States v. Miller, certainly does not support Griswold's theory. The court in Miller, in refusing to take judicial notice that a short-barreled shotgun had "some reasonable relationship to the preservation or efficiency of a well-regulated militia," merely concluded that that particular firearm did not warrant Second Amendment protection. Does Miller then stand for Griswold's proposition that the only militia that may have guns is the "organized" militia?

Decidely not. To the undoubted discomfort of those who perpetuate the "collective right" canard, there is increasing recognition that the Second Amendment may actually mean what it says—and bear arms shall not be infringed," Prof. Sanford Levinson, in a 1989 Yale Law Journal article titled "The Embarrassing Second Amendment," suggests that the drafters did indeed recognize the Second Amendment as conveying individual, not collective, rights. Also apparently escaping Griswold's scrutiny is a textual analysis of the Bill of Rights in the recent Supreme Court case of United States v. Verdugo-Urquidez (1990), in which Chief Justice Rehnquist, writing for the majority, notes that the term "the people" has the same meaning in the First, Second, Fourth, Ninth and 10th Amendments.

Griswold's argument to restrict the Bill of Rights suggests in exercise in consistent, albeit defective, reasoning. His argument that government (despite the Second Amendment) should "protect" the people against the private ownership of firearms rings strongly of his argument in the famous "Pentagon Papers" case—that the government (despite the First Amendment could also "protect" the people against the "publication of information." History records that the Supreme Court disagreed with Griswold.

Griswold's philosophy of individual rights should disturb anyone who has witnessed the fruits of tyranny. The Bill of Rights was created as an inalienable and perpetual shield against government abuse, including judicial abuse. If it is possible to convert the Second Amendment into a "phantom," then there is no reason to expect that any other fundamental guarantee of liberty stands on stronger ground.

TRIBUTE TO RICHARD MUGRIDGE

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a distinguished individual and my good friend, Mr. Richard Mugridge.

Rick has been a hard-working individual in Michigan's 12th District for some time now. I have come to know him through his extensive work on my campaigns and know he has always been there to help me. His commitment to my campaigns, however, is exceeded by his commitment to his union.

In 1968 Rick began working for Michigan Bell. Shortly thereafter he became active in his CWA Local 4014. He became an election committee member in 1972.

In 1976, Rick received a great honor from his fellow members when he was appointed chief steward. He was then elected vice president in 1981 for a 3-year term. In 1984, CWA Local 4014 and 4008 merged. Rick has served as vice president of the north area for the past 6 years.

Rick serves on the election, bylaws, legislative, and mobilization committees. His hard work and dedication have earned him respect and success. He has been, through the years, a tireless champion for his fellow union members.

Rick has been a loyal volunteer of mine since my first campaign for Congress. I am honored to call him a friend and proud to have his support. I hope, and expect, that Rick and I will stand shoulder to shoulder in the many challenges to come.

INTRODUCTION OF THE "BEEPER BILL"

HON. CARDISS COLLINS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that is intended to help put a dent in the ease with which the Nation's illegal narcotics trade is carried on. The Telecommunications Drug Enforcement Act of 1991 would allow law enforcement officials to obtain a court order to cut off the mobile communications service of persons the police have probable cause to believe are using those devices to participate in the illegal drug market.

Over the past several years, as communications technology has advanced, so has the sophisticated use of new communications devices by persons involved in the illegal drug market. The use of digital voice and message beepers, mobile cellular telephones and facsimile machines in the drug trade is very high and growing. A law enforcement official in the District of Columbia estimates that 90 percent of the people arrested in the city for drug dealing have beepers, and that an estimated 25 pagers are confiscated each week which have been used in the drug trade. The use of these devices, together with the use of public telephones, has made the job of investigating and identifying drug traffickers a difficult task. The legislation that I am proposing will allow law enforcement officials to obtain a court order, based on probable cause, to disconnect the mobile communications service to persons the police have reason to believe are using the equipment for illegal purposes.

Obviously, we must utilize all means necessary and proper to fight the war on drugs. Since there is vast evidence that otherwise useful, convenient and innocuous devices are being used to perpetuate the drug trade, we must attempt to stop this practice. While I do not have any notions that this measure will stop drug dealers in their tracks. I do believe it will be yet another hurdle or hindrance in their dirty business. I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

INTERNATIONAL FUND FOR IRELAND AND THE MACBRIDE PRINCIPLES

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which would take an important step toward the elimination of job discrimination in the north of Ireland. My bill stipulates that organizations receiving financial support from the American contribution to the International Fund for Ireland would be required to abide by the MacBride principles of fair employment.

When I visited Ireland in the summer of 1989, representatives of the minority Catholic community raised concerns about the administration of the IFI and indicated that the $20 million annual funding level from the United States was simply contributing to continued discrimination against the Catholic minority.

The MacBride principles, developed and very successfully promoted by the Irish National Caucus, are similar to the Sullivan principles utilized to combat discrimination in South Africa. The MacBride principles:

First, prohibit discrimination based on religious affiliation;

Second, provide for the protection of minority employees at the workplace;

Third, ban provocative sectarian and political emblems from the workplace;

Fourth, establish layoff, recall, and termination procedures which do not favor particular religious groups;

Fifth, prohibit job reservations, apprenticeship restrictions, and differential employment criteria, which discriminate on the basis of religion or ethnic origin;

Sixth, develop training programs that will prepare substantial numbers of minority employees for managerial, supervisor, administrative, clerical, and technical jobs.

My bill would help ensure that American taxpayers' money is not used to further discrimination in Ireland. At no time should the United States support anti-Catholic discrimination, but in particular during this era of extreme budget constraints we must ensure that every dollar is utilized effectively.

INTRODUCTION OF THE FEDERAL BUDGET STRUCTURE ACT OF 1991

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced the Federal Budget Structure Act of 1991.

Before describing the provisions of this legislation, however, I wish to express my appreciation for the valuable assistance of Charles Bowsher, the Comptroller General, and his staff in helping to develop this legislation. The Comptroller continues to play a valuable leadership role in improving our antiquated financial management practices.

The Federal Budget Structure Act simply seeks to identify, define, and present separate operating and capital components of the Federal budget, and to distinguish between Federal funds and trust funds, while maintaining a unified budget. It is not yet a perfect piece of legislation, but hopefully it will help fuel a needed debate.

Mr. Speaker, let me reiterate that this legislation seeks to retain a unified budget. This proposal does not attempt to reduce the Federal budget deficit through more smoke and mirrors by taking capital expenditures off-budget. A unified budget is maintained.

This legislation seeks to provide what the existing budget does not—adequate information on the revenues, expenditures, surplus/deficit amounts, and financing requirements for capital activities of the Federal Government. It also attempts to provide a distinction between Federal funds and trust funds, and between capital and operating activities in a manner which does not hinder identifying the resources needed to meet the Government's capital infrastructure needs.

The benefits of a capital budget are many. The private sector and a large majority of State and local governments have set a financial example of the direction the Federal Government should follow. A capital budget:

Focuses attention to a greater degree on the deteriorating physical infrastructure of the Nation and allows us to make more rational investment decisions;

Promotes intergenerational equity by burdening future generations with debt service only for activities that provide future tangible benefits—capital;

Provides more equitable budget treatment of capital activities by avoiding the current front-end loading of the full costs in the first year; and

Shows that borrowing to finance capital investments is accompanied by an increase in the Nation's assets.

A capital budget that remains part of the unified budget may also help us better define "What is a balanced budget?" As we move in the direction of a balanced budget, we need to more fully explore whether it makes sense for the Federal Government to balance its annual budget under current bookkeeping practices.

Efforts to improve Federal financial management and better identify capital activities will bear directly on the quality and clarity of the financial information that we use to make budget decisions.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, Congress continues to debate reducing the Federal budget deficit, budget process reform, and more. However, all this may be to no avail unless we recognize the most fundamental problem—the lack of accurate, timely, and comprehensive Federal financial information.

THE QUALITY CHILD CARE DEMONSTRATION ACT

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with Representative NANCY JOHNSON, of Connecticut, to reintroduce the Quality Child Care Demonstration Act. This legislation is designed to establish a model child care grant program.

In the sweeping child care legislation passed last Congress, one of the major principles at the foundation of the bill was that parents, States, and localities are better decisionmakers than the Federal Government on how to care for children.

The idea behind the Quality Child Care Demonstration Act is to identify successful child care centers at the local level and use their expertise to set up a network of community and family day care centers. There is a wealth of good, practical ideas and experience already out there in the private sector which we should try to tap into. This legislation is an outgrowth of the child care challenge campaign conducted in Ventura County with Congresswoman NANCY JOHNSON.

The legislation we are reintroducing provides a mechanism for local initiatives and expertise to be recognized and then applied to other areas. Under the bill, outstanding child care centers would receive block grants to provide support and training for other centers in their area.

During the 101st Congress, the Quality Child Care Demonstration Act was included in the House of Representatives' child care legislation, but was unfortunately dropped in the conference in the final weeks of the second session.

With the passage of major child care legislation last Congress, it will be the responsibility of the 102d Congress to oversee the implementation of the law, identify its shortcomings, correct its flaws, and ensure that the founding principles of the law are realized to their fullest extent. The Quality Child Care Demonstration Act is designed for such a purpose, and I encourage my colleagues to join in our efforts to bring the finest child care available to all families by cosponsoring this important legislation.

DECLARATION OF EL SALVADOR

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, the need for freedom loving people to strongly support the efforts of El Salvador's President Alfredo Christiani in his country's brave struggle against the Marxist FMLN has been recently memorialized by a declaration signed by the Presidents of Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Costa Rica. I am pleased to share with my colleagues the text of this important document:

"DECLARATION ON EL SALVADOR" ISSUED BY THE CENTRAL AMERICAN PRESIDENTS IN PUNTA ARENAS, COSTA RICA ON 17 DECEMBER 1990

The Presidents of Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua, aware of the difficult situation that prevails in the fraternal nation of El Salvador, a situation that was worsened over the past few days due to the actions of the FMLN (Farabundg Marti National Liberation Front), which have affected the civilian population and have led to a qualitative escalation of the armed conflict through the FMLN's use of sophisticated and highly destructive weapons;

Recalling the commitments of the Central American governments within the esquipulas process with regard to their commitment to promote a cease-fire and national reconciliation and according to which dialogue should prevail over violence and reason over rancor, taking into account that the corresponding governments would begin a dialogue with all disarmed opposition groups and with those that have embraced the amnesty law, ". . . . and to conduct all the necessary efforts to attain an effective cease-fire within the framework of the constitution;"

Once again, recognizing the efforts of Salvadoran President Alfredo Cristiani since 1 June 1989 to end the Salvadoran armed conflict through dialogue with the FMLN and to attain full incorporation of this armed, rebel group into the peaceful and democratic life of the country;

Reiterating that peace, freedom, democracy, and development are based on respect for a country's legal, constitutional order, which should be modified only through the corresponding legal means and by the legitimate authorities elected by and representing the people's sovereign will as freely expressed in the election processes;

Reasserting the need for peace that has resulted from reconciliation and permanent stability throughout Central America to attain the social and economic development our nations demand and that we cannot attain due to the existence of conflicts in some of the region's countries, and especially due to the situation that prevails in El Salvador;

Taking into account that the dialogue process between the Salvadoran Government and the FMLN has been hindered by the FMLN's persistent, violent actions;

Recalling the San Isidro de Coronado declaration in which it was decided to involve the international community in the Salvadoran peace process through the presence of the United Nations Secretary General, who was called upon to take the necessary actions for the dialogue between the Salvadoran Government and the FMLN to be resumed, and to contribute toward the successful development of that dialogue;

Praising and recognizing the valuable participation of UN Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar, under whose auspices the Geneva agreement was signed on April 1989, which allows the resumption of the Salvadoran peace process and in which the two sides have asserted their good faith and willingness to seek a definitive solution to the armed conflict through negotiations;

Emphasizing the constructive position the Salvadoran Government, which has agreed to hold open and serious talks on all topics included in the peace process agenda, including that of the Salvadoran armed forces, the existence of which is established by the constitution;

Stating that the FMLN's attitude within the dialogue has prevented attaining a prompt solution to the armed conflict and that the FMLN's new offensive violates the agreement on human rights signed in San Jose, Costa Rica on 16 July 1990 which established a commitment to prevent all actions or practices that endanger people's lives, honor, safety, and freedom;

The Presidents of Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua agree;

1. To support the Salvadoran people's will for peace, democracy, and reconciliation, which has repeatedly been expressed over the past few years through honest and pluralist elections.

2. To recognize the Salvadoran Government's political resolve and compliance with the commitments to attain peace and democracy within the framework of the procedure to establish firm and lasting peace in Central America of Esquipulas II and subsequent declarations, especially those of Tela and San Isidro de Coronado.

3. To reassert their resolute support for Salvadoran President Alfredo Cristiani and his reiterated and continuing efforts to attain peace through peaceful means, such as dialogue and negotiations.

4. To reiterate the need to immediately and effectively fulfill the agreement on human rights and to praise President Cristiani's firm resolve in this regard.

5. To recognize and emphasize the valuable efforts of the U.N. Secretary General Director toward a peaceful solution to the Salvadoran conflict, which threatens peace and stability in Central America.

6. To condemn the violent actions of the FMLN, which have inflicted death and grief upon the Salvadoran civilian population and serious damage upon the country's economic infrastructure.

7. To demand that the FMLN immediately halt the use of sophisticated weapons, such as those used in its recent offensive, and to ask the U.N. observer group in Central America to promptly conduct the necessary investigations to ascertain the origin of the aforementioned weapons.

8. To vigorously demand that the FMLN observe an immediate and effective cease-fire, thus proving its political resolve to reach agreements that would lead to firm and lasting peace in the region, as soon as possible and to demand that the FMLN refrain from hindering elections, give up the armed struggle, and rejoin the democratic life of the country.

To ask all the people and governments of the world:

1. To firmly and resolutely support this Central American Government's initiative, the legitimate expression of the will of its people.

2. To contribute with the efforts toward convincing the FMLN of the absolute need to negotiate and take advantage of the willingness to talk shown by the Salvadoran Government to attain peace.

3. To contribute, as a means of promoting the process for a peaceful solution of the conflict, by ceasing all military, economic, logistical, and public assistance that the FMLN still enjoys in various parts of the world.

For their part, the presidents commit themselves to:

1. Supporting with their actions the negotiations carried out under the auspices of the U.N. Secretary General.

2. Becoming a follow-up mechanism in the negotiating process between the government and the FMLN to contribute toward promoting the objectives proposed to achieve a peaceful and democratic solution in El Salvador, in accordance with agreements reached by the parties.

3. Conducting efforts directly, and through Central American diplomatic representatives before the U.N. Secretary General and Security Council and the OAS Permanent Council and Secretary General, to obtain their support for this initiative. Also to request political and material support for this initiative from governments, churches, and other organizations.

4. Supporting these efforts and promoting intensive diplomatic activity, in a joint and coordinated manner, before the entire international community, particularly before those governments that have links and interests in the Salvadoran conflict.

5. Instructing foreign ministers to agree, as soon as possible, on measures and actions to attain the objectives specified in this document.

Finally, the presidents agree on stressing the urgency of immediately putting an end to the conflict, the continuation of which can only bring more mourning to the people of Central America.

Puntarenas, Costa Rica.

17 December 1990

(Signed) Marco Vinicio Cerezo Arevalo, President of Guatemala, Rafael Leonardo Callejas, President of Honduras, Violeta Barrios de Chamorro, President of Nicaragua, Rafael Angel Calderon Fournier, President of Costa Rica.

The declaration was also signed by Salvadoran President Alfredo Cristiani, and Panamanian President Guillermo Endara, as honor witness and observer.

THE EXTON BYPASS

HON. RICHARD T. SCHULZE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today before this distinguished body that I may bring to the attention of the newly assembled 102d Congress the paramount infrastructure concern of my constituents in Pennsylvania—the Exton bypass.

Unprecedented commercial and industrial growth in the rural and suburban areas between the port of Philadelphia and Lancaster, PA, have swollen surface transportation demands far beyond the capacity of U.S. Route 30 where it passes through Exton, PA. West of Exton, Route 30 is a four-lane expressway; east of Exton, traffic flows on a modern highway with fully controlled access. The 5.5-mile segment of U.S. Route 30 which passes through the heart of Exton is the weak link in this highway of national importance. It is a transportation coronary of congestion and gridlock.

The solution is the Exton bypass. It will complete the U.S. Route 30 corridor by connecting the Coatesville-Downingtown bypass to U.S. Route 202. Sixty percent of the Route 30 traffic which staggers through Exton from stop light to stop light, neither originates nor ends in Exton. Local and other passthrough traffic is forced into diversionary routes which swells feeder roads and arteries into gridlock. The Exton bypass will whisk at least 60 percent of the current traffic along highways of limited access and fully controlled access design.

The Exton bypass will do much more than provide the much-needed relief of traffic congestion. The Exton bypass also brings greater safety, ease of access to public transportation, and commercial infrastructure to southeastern Pennsylvania. Currently, all trucks hauling between the Philadelphia port and Lancaster must rubberneck through Exton. Traffic studies have documented an extremely disproportionate volume of trucks on Route 30. This condition has led to a high rate of truck accidents which would be tremendously reduced by construction of the Exton bypass.

The Exton bypass will also improve connections between private vehicle commuters and public transportation. Two commuter rail stations, the Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority's [SEPTA] R5 line and Amtrak's Harrisburg/Philadelphia line interface with the Route 30 corridor. By relieving intense congestion in the vicinity of these stations, rail commuters will have more efficient access to rail and bus options which will further reduce road traffic in the region.

Finally, by offering efficient movement of personnel and materials, the Exton bypass will bring surface transportation infrastructure needs closer to current commercial demands and facilitate additional commercial growth.

The severe need for construction of the Exton bypass has garnered broad and significant support. Private contributors have donated $5 million for improvements along the existing Route 30, which will be the business loop of Route 30 after the bypass is completed. The Chester County Planning Commission has identified the Exton bypass as its top infrastructure objective. SEPTA's Louis J. Gambaccini, chief operations officer and general manager expressed strong support for the Exton bypass and said he believed it will serve as a model for future transportation projects in the Nation because of its effective integration of rail, bus, and automobile transportation. Congressmen Curt Weldon and Robert Walker also support the Exton bypass because of the regional impact of the current roadway deficiency and the great benefits the bypass will yield. The Pennsylvania Department of Transportation has already spent $33 million for engineering designs, relocating major utility lines and pipes and has currently acquired about 80 percent of the needed rights of way. Last, U.S. Department of Transportation Secretary Samuel K. Skinner voiced direct support for construction of the Exton bypass.

With such broad support for constructing the Exton bypass, I was hopeful and optimistic about its imminent materialization. In the meanwhile however, the feeble link of U.S. Route 30 where it passes through Exton, PA, handles more daily and peak hour traffic than the nearest parallel interstate, the Pennsylvania Turnpike near the Downingtown interchange.

With current Federal budget constraints, only the most critical infrastructure needs should get priority funding. The Exton bypass meets and exceeds that description. I urge continued commitment at all levels for support of this most worthy use of taxpayers' money. Now is the time for constructing the Exton bypass.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARTS AND HUMANITIES

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which will create a Cabinet office for the arts and humanities within the executive branch. Not only would such an agency be an asset to the administration, but it would verify the idea that our country should have a federally funded national program dedicated solely to the enhancement of its own cultural heritage.

Mr. Speaker, why do we need a Secretary of the Arts and Humanities? Being a former student and professor of the fine arts, I have experienced the tremendous impact that artistic ventures have on society. Now, as a Member of Congress, I am able to advocate the funding of cultural programs on a national level. I realize that the Federal Government promotes the work of artists through the national endowments. However, this small amount of support is just not enough.

Mr. Speaker, in 1965, the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities was created by Congress. Since its establishment, it has received strong, bipartisan support over the years, both in Congress and in the White House. Presidents Johnson, Nixon, Ford, and Carter, who were men of strongly different philosophies on the purpose and function of Government, all approved a congressional declaration that financial assistance for the arts and humanities is a proper responsibility of the Federal Government in encouraging and enriching the human mind and spirit, and in fostering the creativity of the American people. Those Presidents requested increased amounts of support for our cultural heritage and development; and each year Congress overwhelmingly approved such increases.

Mr. Speaker, did you know that only one-half of 1 percent of the Bush administration's fiscal year 1991 budget is directed toward support of the arts? We must realize that these funds support all our country's major cultural programs. These include: The National Endowment for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Institute for Museum Services, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Gallery of Art and the Commission of Fine Arts.

As legislators, we have to ask ourselves: Can we justify the impact that these lean funding levels will have in our districts? Can we afford to lose the programs that foster the arts and humanities, museums, aquariums, zoos, and botanical gardens? Can we afford to lose our historical properties and programs that preserve our great works of art?

Ideally, all segments of our society should have the opportunity to take part in the experience of artistic expression and creativity. The Smithsonian Institution's fine collections and research services, as well as the programs under the jurisdiction of the National Endowment for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Humanities and the Institute for Museum Services provide direct return to Americans of all ethnic, social, economic, and educational levels. The benefits of these programs are realized in rural as well as urban America, by the old as well as the young. Thse agencies have helped to make participation in the cultural community more equitable and feasible for all segments of our society. This, however, is not enough. The Department of Arts and Humanities would ensure that all citizens were able to enjoy, learn, and benefit from the arts.

American artists have served as some of our most important ambassadors to the entire world. Through their work, artists have historically brought diverse cultures together. The shared experience of artistic expression and aesthetics creates the elements that enrich the soul and appeal to our higher instincts as human beings. American literature, music, performing and visual arts, and architecture are emulated all over the world.

People need the arts. Public attendance at museums is tremendous and overflow crowds are not uncommon. Furthermore, in these times when trade issues and competitivess are so heatedly dicussed, museums can and do make a unique and extraordinary contribution.

Mr. Speaker, there is an artistic deficit in this country. The Federal Government has an important responsibility to ensure the protection of our cultural heritage. We cannot allow financial danger and fiscal preoccupation to outweigh artistic decisions and creative energy. Our cultural institutions have continued to present innovative works, overwhelmingly high-quality performances and important outreach and educational programs. The continual financial struggle threatens the artistic freedom to invent, to take chances, and to present cultural activities to a broad range of our public. The Federal Government must continue to expand its small but vital role in the cultural integrity of our Nation. It is time to create a Cabinet-level office dedicated to the arts.

TRIBUTE TO JANE BOECKMANN

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, it is almost impossible to think about California's San Fernando Valley without thinking of one of its leading citizens, Mrs. Jane Boeckmann.

Mrs. Boeckmann is one of the most dynamic people I have ever met. In her many roles as businesswoman, civic leader, philanthropist, humanitarian, wife, and mother, she has touched the lives of thousands.

Besides her full-time occupation of founder and publisher of Valley magazine, she is involved with many organizations. She serves on the board of trustees for the Los Angeles County Museum of Natural History; the board of directors for Excellence in Media; the board of directors of World of Opportunities, International; the Wave of Excellence Committee for Pepperdine University; the board of directors for the 51st District Agricultural Association; the board of directors of Valley Presbyterian Hospital; and the board of directors and Executive Committee at the Cultural Foundation, which she cofounded.

Recently, while Congress was out of session, Mrs. Boeckmann was once again recognized for her many achievements when she was honored by the Valley Industry and Commerce Association for the success of Valley magazine and its positive approach to journalism. It is only the most recent in a long series of accolades she has earned.

Among her many honors, Mrs. Boeckmann has received the Daisy Award from the San Fernando Valley Girl Scouts Council; the Newsmaker of the Year Award from the Valley Press Club; the Circle Award from the Juvenile Justice Connection; California Mother of the Year from American Mothers, Inc.; the Portraits in Excellence Award from B'nai B'rith; and the Patriotic Citizen of the Year Award from the Military Order of World Wars. In addition, she is the only woman ever to receive the prestigious Fernando Award, given yearly for outstanding service to the San Fernando Valley.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure you will agree with me that Jane Boeckmann has earned her many recognitions, and ask my colleagues to join me in saluting her for her outstanding work on behalf of her community.

GOODWILL AND BROKEN PROMISES

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, the savings and loan fiasco continues to be front page news in many States across the country. My home State of Illinois has seen the Federal Government take over dozens of thrifts with the cost being picked up by the American taxpayer. Unfortunately, the taxpayer may often be picking up a tab that he need not be paying had the Federal Government kept their promise with many S&L's in the first place.

Such is the case of those thrifts that have supervisory goodwill on their books. In the early 1980's a number of savings institutions were asked by our Government to acquire ailing S&L's in order to help the Government and the taxpayers avert paying billions of dollars in bailout funds. These institutions did not get cash or FSLIC notes for taking on these ailing thrifts, but instead received what has become known as supervisory goodwill. In agreements with the Government, these acquiring thrifts were allowed to write off this goodwill over a period of 20 to 40 years. Their ability to help the Government and become involved in these transactions in the first place was premised upon this agreed treatment of supervisory goodwill. The savings institutions in question relied heavily on these agreements and would not have gotten involved in the transactions had there not been such agreements.

Unfortunately, the 1989 thrift legislation broke the agreements and, as a result, is causing the unnecessary takeover of many institutions all at the expense of the American taxpayer. The article that follows appeared in the December 22, 1990, Chicago Tribune and is an example of what the 1989 thrift legislation has done to an S&L that helped the Federal Government in time of need and later received less than appropriate thanks for its trouble. After such a sorry performance, no one can be blamed for not trusting the promises of the Federal Government in the future.

OLYMPIC S&L CHIEF LOSES BATTLE, BUT NOT HIS CONVICTIONS

(By Mike Dorning)

John Lanigan likes to say he's responsible for getting Office of Thrift Supervision Director Timothy Ryan his job.

Nevertheless, just over a week ago, Ryan put Lanigan, the chairman of Olympic Federal Savings & Loan Association, out of his.

For Lanigan, the man whose efforts to avert a government takeover of his $1 billion Berwyn thrift temporarily threw the entire savings and loan bailout into question, the Christmas season has been one of "disappointment," to use the words that now come slowly from his mouth.

Even so, a smile breaks out over his large, Irish face as he ruminates on the twin holiday greetings he received from the federal government: the seizure of Olympic by the OTS, followed quickly by a Christmas card from George and Barbara Bush.

Though he spent months in court unsuccessfully trying to block a takeover, the arrival of government agents to seize his thrift at the close of business on Dec. 14 "was a total surprise," says Lanigan.

Still a critic of the bailout, Lanigan, 55, says he has accepted the loss of Olympic as inevitable. There will be no more lawsuits.

"Olympic is in the past now," he says. "I'm hoping that what happened is in the best interests of the employees out there and depositors out there, but I've got to move on."

At the time of the takeover, Lanigan was courting a corporate savior. Olympic itself had played that role before, and it was the institution's acquisitions of failing thrifts that led to its fall.

During the 1980s, Olympic took over seven troubled thrifts. But a change in government accounting rules that previously had encouraged those mergers rendered Olympic and about 200 other thrifts insolvent. And while Lanigan can no longer hope to spare Olympic, he says he will continue to promote his own plan for avoiding government takeovers of other thrifts in the same situation.

"Each case should be looked at differently, not just say an institution has no net worth," Lanigan says. "When you shut down an institution, you shut off credit. We concentrated on student loans, consumer loans and car loans."

Lanigan asserts that Olympic had only $3 million in bad loans at the time it closed. Still, Olympic statements indicate its tangible capital was a negative $102.5 million as of Oct. 31.

For the thrifts that have become insolvent by acquiring weak institutions, Lanigan proposes the government replace the "supervisory good will"—an asset that existed only on paper—it granted, and then took away from, those thrifts with real assets now held by the Resolution Trust Corp., the government's manager of property and loans from failed S&Ls. In return, under Lanigan's proposal, the government would have stock in the S&Ls, which it could sell in better times.

"That brings those assets into the normal flow of business. It's like taking used cars and, instead of putting them in the junkyard, putting them in the car lot, where they'll be fixed and put back on the road," Lanigan says.

Lanigan believes that kind of aid would have allowed Olympic to weather the recession without a long-term loss to the government. He says he stands by an estimate he made in April that it will cost taxpayers at least $200 million to seize and resell Olympic.

A spokesman for OTS said Friday the agency has no response to Lanigan's proposal.

Before the bailout legislation, when the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. did not have the money to close thrifts, supervisory good will was an inducement offered to get strong institutions to take over weak ones to avoid insolvencies. The new, merged S&Ls could count that good will as an asset toward meeting capital requirements, and they were given 25 to 40 years to write off the asset.

But with Congress concerned about the reliability of S&L assets, the bailout legislation included a provision requiring thrifts to write off the supervisory good will within five years and barred them from using it to meet capital requirements. On Oct. 31, Olympic had $113.9 million of supervisory good will on its books.

The rule change rendered Olympic insolvent overnight.

To Lanigan, the supervisory good will "looked like a carrot, but it turned out to be arsenic. If I'd known it was arsenic, I wouldn't have taken it."

Lanigan filed suit against the rule, arguing it amounted to an unconstitutional "taking of property" without due process of law. The lawsuit eventually was dismissed, but not until after a federal judge ruled in favor of Lanigan on another issue—that M. Danny Wall, who then headed the thrift bailout, had no power to close thrifts.

The authors of the bailout legislation had sought to avoid a possibly embarrassing confirmation hearing for Wall by allowing him to take the position without Senate approval.

The judge ruled the Constitution required confirmation from Congress, meaning the OTS had no authority to act.

Ryan quickly was appointed and confirmed by the Senate for the post, and the issue became moot.

Now, after three years as Illinois top S&L regulator during the 1970s and 14 years as Olympic's chief executive officer, Lanigan says he has no specific career plans, only a specific goal for the new year: Testifying before Congress on the S&L bailout.

VETERANS' EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

HON. TIMOTHY J. PENNY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, during the second session of the 101st Congress, we reached agreement with the other body on a compromise measure concerning veterans' education and employment issues. Unfortunately, the session ended before final action could be taken on the agreement. Accordingly, the bill I am introducing today reflects that compromise and includes provisions derived from measures acted on during the 101st Congress—H.R. 4087, H.R. 4088, H.R. 4089, and S. 2100. The following is a brief summary of the major provisions included in the compromise agreement.

DEFINITION OF VIETNAM ERA VETERAN

Section 1 of the compromise measure would amend section 2011(2)(B) of title 38 to extend the definition of a veteran of the Vietnam era for eligibility purposes under Chapter 41 (Job Counseling, Training, and Placement Service for Veterans) and Chapter 42 (Employment and Training of Veterans) to December 31, 1994. Under current law, this definition would expire on December 31, 1991, thus eliminating certain requirements for affirmative action for Vietnam era veterans and significantly reducing the number of Disabled Veterans Outreach Specialists [DVOP's].

Although section 1(c) of H.R. 4087, approved by the House on July 10, 1990, would have extended the definition through December 31, 1996, I believe the agreement reached with the other body is a good one. Section 301 of S. 2100, as reported, would have amended section 2001(2) of title 38, to extend the December 31, 1991, deadline only through December 31, 1993, and only for the purpose of the DVOP staffing level. It would not have protected the affirmative action requirements affecting Vietnam era veterans contained in Chapter 42 of title 38. The agreement I am introducing today will enable the Subcommittee on Education, Training and Employment to review DVOP staffing and other employment-related issues during the 102nd Congress without interruption of current employment-related benefits and services for veterans.

EDUCATIONAL AND VOCATIONAL COUNSELING

Section 2 of H.R. 4089, approved by the House on July 10, 1990, would have extended the benefits of DVA [Department of Veterans Affairs] educational and vocational counseling to servicepersons who are within 180 days of discharge or release from active duty. It would also have provided counseling for veterans not eligible for education benefits and who were discharged or released from active duty under other than dishonorable conditions if not more than 1 year has elapsed since the date of their discharge or release. Under existing law, such counseling is available only to individuals who have eligibility for assistance under one of the education of rehabilitation programs administered by DVA.

Legislation acted on by the Senate during the 101st Congress did not include any corresponding provisions. However, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that our colleagues in the other body recognized the importance of providing these educational and vocational counseling services, and section 2 of the compromise agreement includes these provisions. I wish to express my appreciation for their support. With significant reductions in military force levels a distinct possibility, it is important that DVA have the authority to furnish educational and vocational counseling services to soon-to-be-discharged individuals and to veterans who are not eligible for other education and rehabilitation programs. This bill will provide to our Nation's servicepersons and veterans deserved assistance in selecting appropriate educational and career opportunities and in making a successful transition from military to civilian life.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION UNDER CHAPTER 31

Section 2 of H.R. 4089 and section 303 of S. 2100, as reported, would have amended title 38 to allow DVA to extend vocational rehabilitation services and benefits to servicepersons pending discharge from active duty, who have a service-connected disability, and who are being treated in private facilities or government facilities other than ones operated by the Department of Defense [DOD]. Under existing law, only those servicepersons being treated in DOD facilities are eligible for Chapter 31 vocational rehabilitation services and benefits.

Mr. Speaker, both bodies agree it is appropriate that Chapter 31 services be extended to service-disabled active duty military personnel even though they are being treated in non-DOD medical facilities. Section 3 of the compromise measure will accomplish this and will permit comprehensive rehabilitation planning to be initiated during the period of medical care and treatment. I believe this will enable our Nation's disabled servicepersons and veterans to successfully achieve rehabilitation.

Section 2 of H.R. 4089 would also have amended title 38 to provide the appropriate chapter 31 institutional monthly subsistance allowance to disabled veterans who are in uncompensated OJT [on-the-job training] programs offered by State and local governments. Under existing law, only disabled veterans in Federal Government OJT programs receive this subsistance allowance. Legislation approved by the Senate during the 101st Congress did not contain a similar provision. However, Mr. Speaker, the other body has again graciously accepted the House provision which is included in section 3 of the compromise measure. Both bodies are in accord that disabled veterans in State and local government uncompensated OJT programs deserve the same consideration and subsistance allowance as their counterparts in similar Federal programs. The bill I am introducing today corrects this inequity and provides the same level of benefits to all disabled veterans pursuing uncompensated government OJT programs.

ELIMINATION OF OVERPAYMENT THROUGH WORK-STUDY

Section 305 of S. 2100, as reported, would have amended title 38 to permit individuals to enter into an agreement to perform work-study services and to have the work-study allowance credited to an account receivable resulting from an overpayment of DVA education or rehabiliation benefits. H.R. 4089 did not have a similar provision.

Section 6 of the compromise agreement includes the Senate provision. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleagues in the Senate for their work on this provision. This new authority will allow DVA to waive certain restrictions on the number and periods of work-study service and the requirement to be in pursuit of a program of education, and will permit DVA to reduce an individual's overpayment by applying the amount payable for the work-study service to the debt owed the Government. As the other body has noted, both the Government and the individual will benefit, since this provision will allow persons, who may have available time but only limited financial resources, to satisfy their obligations to DVA.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON VETERANS EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING

Section 8 of the introduced bill would replace the existing Secretary of Labor's Committee on Veterans' Employment with an Advisory Committee on Veterans Employment and Training. This provision is substantially the same as that included in section 2 of H.R. 4087. This restructuring will enable the Secretary of Labor and the Congress to make more informed decisions regarding the employment and training needs of our Nation's veterans, and I appreciate the other body's support of the House provision.

VETERANS READJUSTMENT APPOINTMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased we were able to reach agreement with the other body on provisions related to the Veterans Readjustment Appointment [VRA] Program. Since the establishment of VRA under Executive Order 11397, issued by President Lyndon Johnson in 1968, this highly successful noncompetitive appointment authority has enabled hundreds of thousands of veterans to enter the Federal work force. Although we were unable to agree on all points, many of the provisions of H.R. 4088, approved by the House on June 12, 1990, are contained in section 9 of the compromise measure. I want to remind my colleagues that the House has passed legislation several times to make the VRA a permanent program and to remove the education-level restriction now in law. The compromise includes these changes, and I am particularly gratified we were able to reach agreement with the other on these matters. I appreciate their cooperation and support.

HONORING THE RETIREMENT OF JOSEPH T. KELLEY OF PITTSFIELD, MA

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. CONTE. I rise today in recognition of Joseph T. Kelley, chairman of the board of the Berkshire Gas Co. of Pittsfield, MA, upon the occasion of his retirement as senior executive officer of that company after a long and distinguished career.

Joe Kelley is known nationally for his contributions to the natural gas industry. A decorated veteran with wide ranging experience in the utility field, his expertise has been vital to his industry and his business acumen has been instrumental in shaping the natural gas industry, especially in New England.

He came to Pittsfield in 1953 as vice president and general manager of the Pittsfield Coal Gas Co. With the acquisition of Berkshire Gas of North Adams in 1954, Pittsfield Coal Gas came to be known as the Berkshire Gas Co. Under his leadership, the company expanded once again in 1958 with the acquisition of the Greenfield Gas Light Co. Today, Berkshire Gas serves more than 30,000 customers in three counties, with assets that have grown more than 100 times since 1954.

In addition to playing key roles in senior positions with other New England gas utilities he has served as chairman of the New England Gas Association and president of the Guild of Gas Managers. In addition, he currently serves as chairman of Starbase Technologies of Pittsfield and as a director of the Berkshire Mutual Insurance Co. and EnergyNorth of Manchester, NH.

I am proud to count Joe Kelley as a valued friend and constituent. He has labored long and hard both in business and in aiding others to achieve their full potential. He is a man among men, and I take this opportunity to salute and congratulate him upon the occasion of his retirement.

IN SUPPORT OF LEGISLATION TO ALLOW MEDICINES AND MEDICAL SUPPLIES TO BE EXPORTED TO CUBA

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which would allow medicines, medical supplies and equipment to be exported to Cuba, notwithstanding the United States trade embargo against that country.

Since 1962, the United States has, with few exceptions, prohibited trade and other relations with Cuba. This legislation would provide a special humanitarian exemption to that embargo for the purpose of exporting much-needed medicines and medical supplies.

Some of our colleagues may disagree about the best way to promote political reform and human rights in Cuba. I have, for many years, argued that the United States could most effectively pursue these goals by restoring diplomatic and economic relations, thus giving us greater contact and leverage with the Cuban Government.

Many in Congress and in the Bush administration, however, are moving in just the opposite direction, toward further restrictions on contacts between the United States and Cuba. I believe this approach is counterproductive and only serves to isolate the Cuban people even further from the dramatic changes occurring around the world.

Regardless of this difference of opinion, however, there should be no disagreement about one issue. People in need of medical supplies should not be denied our help simply because we disagree with their leaders. The United States, when acting in consonance with its highest principles, has traditionally been willing to extend such humanitarian assistance to other nations regardless of the ideologies of their leaders. This principle has not been honored in our policy toward Cuba.

The legislation I am proposing today—which was originally introduced by our late colleague, Congressman Mickey Leland—would make a special exception to the United States trade embargo against Cuba and would allow the export of medicines or medical supplies, instruments, or equipment.

I urge my colleagues to support this humanitarian legislation.

The text of the legislation follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENT TO EMBARGO AUTHORITY IN THE FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1961.

Section 620(a)(1) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2370(a)(1)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the second sentence the following ", except that any such embargo shall not apply with respect to the export of any medicines or medical supplies, instruments, or equipment".

SEC. 2. LIMITATION ON EXISTING RESTRICTIONS ON TRADE WITH CUBA.

Upon the enactment of this Act, any regulation, proclamation, or provision of law, including Presidential Proclamation 3447 of February 3, 1962, the Export Administration Regulations (15 CFR 368–399), and Cuban Assets Control Regulations (31 CFR 515), that prohibits exports to Cuba or transactions involving exports to Cuba and that is in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act, shall not apply with respect to the export to Cuba of medicines or medical supplies, instruments, or equipment.

SEC. 3. LIMITATION ON THE FUTURE EXERCISE OF AUTHORITY.

(a) EXPORT ADMINISTRATION ACT OF 1979.—After the enactment of this Act, the President may not exercise the authorities contained in the Export Administration Act of 1979 to restrict the exportation to Cuba of medicines or medical supplies, instruments, or equipment, except to the extent authorized by section 5(m) of that Act.

(b) INTERNATIONAL EMERGENCY ECONOMIC POWERS ACT.—After the enactment of this Act, the President may not exercise the authorities contained in section 203 of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act to restrict the export to Cuba of medicines or medical supplies, instruments, or equipment to the extent such authorities are exercised to deal with a threat to the economy of the United States.

INTRODUCTION OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1991

HON. JACK BROOKS

OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today the Civil Rights Act of 1991.

Since passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, this Nation has made great strides in providing greater opportunity in the workplace for all Americans. Yet, testimony taken during joint hearings of the House Judiciary Committee and the Education and Labor Committee during the last Congress revealed clearly that difficulties in the workplace still exist for women and minorities. In addition, the accomplishments that have been made through decades of struggle were placed in jeopardy by the Supreme Court by a series of restrictive and damaging civil rights decisions in 1989.

Passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1991, is essential to give all women the same rights as those available to minorities, to overcome the roadblocks in civil rights that were raised by the Supreme Court's decisions, and to continue moving forward toward the greater goal of equal opportunity for all Americans. There is no reason, in the last decade of the 20th century, that women and minorities should not be able to compete for jobs on an equal basis with other workers. There is no reason that the women of this country should not have the same rights as others to be compensated for the devastating effects of intentional, flagrant discrimination.

The Civil Rights Act of 1991 essentially embodies the language of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 as reported by the House Judiciary Committee last year. When this act is passed—at the beginning of another great decade of American history—it will provide the needed impetus to business to overcome the last vestiges of second class citizenship for women and minorities in the workplace, to ensure a level playing field for all Americans, and to assure that our brothers and sisters are treated faily and equitably in their struggle for jobs equal to their skills and abilities.

I want to point out one particular provision which was not in the bill as reported out by the committee last year, but which is included in this version. Over the past several months, we have heard opponents of this legislation charge that it would lead to the imposition of quotas in the workplace. There is no basis to this charge. It is a red herring. Mandatory quotas were not required under the law as it existed and was interpreted before the Supreme Court's 1989 decisions. There is no way that this bill could be interpreted as requiring quotas. In fact, section 13 of last year's bill specifically stated, "nothing in the amendments made by this act shall be construed to require an employer to adopt hiring or promotion quotas on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.* * *" The bill that is being introduced today expands on this clear language by specifying that it shall not be construed to "require or encourge" the adoption of quotas. Let us put this spurious and inflammatory issue to rest and consider what the bill actually says and does.

Mr. Speaker, President Bush's veto last year of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 was a shocking affront to our Nation's longstanding bipartisan commitment to equal opportunity. Swift passage of this bill will give the administration a new chance to do the right thing, to place itself on the side of equality and progress, to set aside demagogic and divisive rhetoric. It is time for all of us to get about the business of helping make ours a nation that is "indivisible, with liberty and justice for all." I urge support for the Civil Rights Act of 1991.

LIMITING CONGRESSIONAL TERMS

HON. BOB STUMP

OF ARIZONA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States that would provide for 4-year terms for Representatives and to limit the number of terms Representatives may serve to three.

Limiting congressional terms would be the most effective way of returning Congress to the legislative body envisioned by our Founding Fathers—one of citizen legislators who truly represent the constituents they serve and who are committed to solving our Nation's problems.

Currently, Members may spend one-half or more of every term running for reelection; creating dilemmas for Members and leading many to question whether our actions are designed to promote real solutions to our country's problems or are merely cynical election year maneuvers.

Representatives serving only a limited time will have a greater incentive to focus their attention on policymaking to reform failed Government programs and limit the size and complexity of the Federal bureaucracy in such a way as to benefit the people we serve. Less attention will be given to the creation of Federal programs to address issues perceived by pollsters to be of benefit to one party or the other in the campaign arena.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the House of Representatives can be a more effective and efficient instrument of the people if we spent more time on governance and less time running for reelection.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS EQUIPMENT MANUFACTURING; MADE IN THE U.S.A.

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, several years ago, former President Reagan described the telecommunications industry as one in which "we are still a leader in innovation."

Despite his optimistic assessment, recent information released by the current Bush administration indicates that a more ominous outlook is warranted. Last year, the United States again suffered record trade deficits. Trade deficits for telecommunications equipment soared upwards toward $2 billion. Today, not one residential telephone instrucment—the device pioneered by Alexander Graham Bell—is manufactured by an American company in the United States. I have drafted legislation to reverse this trend.

Today I am introducing a bill to establish our Nation's policy with respect to telecommunications equipment manufacture. Our current policies—or the lack thereof—have resulted in increasing telecommunications trade deficits, as well as unemployment and worker dislocation in that industry, to say nothing of the erosion of American dominance of the telecommunications industry internationally and the related brain-drain.

We have observed American firms like AT&T going offshore to manufacture residential telephones and we have seen an increase in proposed joint venture activities between Bell operating companies and foreign telecommunications equipment manufacturers.

Our trade imbalance results from at least two misguided policies. First, the Republican administrations have permitted foreign nations, such as Japan, to bar high-quality, American-produced telecommunications equipment. Second, these same policy makers opened our trade doors to allow foreign manufacturers to make major inroads into our domestic markets.

The door of free trade must swing both ways. While foreign products pile up higher on our docks and in our stores, American jobs are exported overseas. This is not an idle notion; the Commerce Department has estimated that over two and one half million jobs were lost as a result of the trade deficit.

In addition, American companies, lured by special tax breaks and low wages offered by third world nations, have migrated offshore enmasse. There these expatriate corporations turn back the clock to recreate sweatshops reminiscent of the 19th century. For example, in 1985 AT&T shut down the last plant in the United States—in Shreveport, LA—where residential telephones were made. This operation is now located in Singapore.

This is not an isolated plant closing. Since divestiture, AT&T has closed many of its operations in the United States, costing us not only productive capacity, but also at least 18,000 jobs. Companies such as AT&T apparently pledge allegiance to no flag. Their loyalty is to short-term profit and shareholder satisfaction.

In order to stop this exportation of domestic telecommunications manufacturing employment and profit to foreign countries, I propose legislation to require the regional Bell operating companies to manufacture in the United States any equipment they want to sell here. The Bell operating companies are currently prohibited by the modified final judgment, in the AT&T divestiture case, from producing telecommunications equipment.

My proposal provides for a comprehensive definition of the elusive word manufacture. It specifies that manufacturing includes engineering design, product development, testing, and production. Under the terms of my bill, all these activities would take place in the United States.

In my view, Congress should take steps now to redirect our national telecommunications trade policy so that it benefits America—its consumers and its workers. We must not forget that the telephone is a uniquely American instrument; it was invented here and our predecessors built the world's best communications network around it.

I want to help give the competitive edge in international telecommunications back to America. Before we open telecommunications equipment manufacturing to more competition, I want to make sure that those interested in reaping profit from such action take full advantage of the abundant technological and human resources available to them right here in the good old U.S.A.

America can regain its preeminence in telecommunications trade if we look to our home-based resources. I invite my colleagues to join me in this effort to make America strong again, at least in this area of telecommunications trade.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Telecommunications Equipment Manufacturing Stimulation Act of 1991".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) America's telecommunications system is of critical importance to our national defense;

(2) a key element in maintaining our telecommunications system is ensuring that America possesses state-of-the-art telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment manufacturing capability;

(3) in recent years, America has increasingly relied on foreign production to meet its telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment needs;

(4) foreign firms are capturing a growing share of the American firms have increasingly turned to overseas production;

(5) investment in domestic manufacturing capacity has diminished, raising serious questions about America's continued ability to satisfy its telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment needs in times of crisis; and

(6) experience in recent years with other key industries such as computer and semiconductor technology demonstrates the high price when America falls behind other nations in research and development and in investment in manufacturing capability.

(b) Purposes.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to assure that America's telecommunciations manufacturing capability is not further diminished by requiring domestic manufacture and production of telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment by all former Bell operating companies, to the extent they are allowed to engage in the manufacture of telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment;

(2) to ensure that the necessary domestic telecommunications manufacturing capability so essential to the Nation's defense remains intact;

(3) to encourage domestic investment by both American and foreign firms desiring to engage in the manufacture of telecommunications equipment and customer premises equipment;

(4) to improve America's trade deficit and balance of payments records; and

(5) to produce and maintain additional skilled manufacturing jobs for American workers, while avoiding massive subsidization by the Federal Government, so that short-term costs borne by customers represent an investment in long term increased competition and national security.

SEC. 3. REQUIREMENTS OF DOMESTIC PRODUCTION.

It shall be unlawful for a Bell operating company to use any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce to sell or lease or to provide for sale or lease, directly or through any subsidiary or affiliate—

(1) any telecommunications equipment manufactured, directly or indirectly, by any Bell operating company, unless such equipment was manufactured in the United States, or

(2) any customer premises equipment manufactured, directly or indirectly, by any Bell operating company, unless such equipment was manufactured in the United States.

SEC. 4. ENFORCEMENT BY SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.

(a) General Authority of Secretary of Commerce.—The Secretary of Commerce—

(1) shall be responsible for the enforcement of the requirements of this Act,

(2) shall, within six months after the date of enactment of this Act, prescribe such regulations, and provide such exemptions therefrom, as may be necessary for the effective enforcement of such requirements and the prevention of shortages in the supply of telecommunications equipment;

(3) may assess civil penalties pursuant to subsection (b);

(4) shall make the reports required by subsection (c);

(5) may conduct such investigations and hearings, take such testimony, and receive such evidence as may be necessary to carry out this Act; and

(6) for such purposes, may—

(A) administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses;

(B) secure directly from any department or agency of the United States information necessary to carry out this Act; and

(C) issue subpoenas requiring the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence, which subpoenas shall be enforceable by order of an appropriate district court of the United States.

(b) Civil Penalties.—(1) Whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of Commerce that any Bell operating company has violated the requirements of this Act, the Secretary of Commerce may bring an action in a United States district court to seek, and the court shall have jurisdiction to impose, a civil penalty to be paid by such Bell operating company, or any person aiding and abetting the violation of such Bell operating company. Such a penalty shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States.

(2) The amount of such penalty shall be determined by the court in light of the facts and circumstances, but shall not exceed three times the amount of profits obtained by the Bell operating company in the transaction or transactions that are the basis of the complaint.

(3) If a Bell operating company upon whom such a penalty is imposed shall fail to pay such penalty within the time prescribed in the court's order, the Secretary of Commerce shall refer the matter to the Attorney General who shall recover such penalty by action in the appropriate United States district court.

(c) Annual Reports.—(1) The Secretary of Commerce shall, not later than six months after the date of enactment of this Act and annually thereafter, submit a report to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate on the state of the Nation's domestic telecommunications equipment manufacturing industry. Such report shall include—

(A) an evaluation of the continuing need for imposing the requirements of this Act;

(B) recommendations as to amendments to this Act or any other law necessary to enhance and increase the manufacture of telecommunications and customer premises equipment within the United States; and

(C) recommendations as to necessary regulatory treatment of such equipment purchases, sales, and other transactions, in addition to those set forth in section 5 of this Act.

(2) In carrying out any investigation for purposes of preparing the report under paragraph (1), the Secretary of Commerce may secure the assistance of United States Government agencies having responsibilities in telecommunications and related matters, including (but not limited to) the Federal Communications Commission, the National Telecommunications and Information Administration, and the Bureau of the Census.

SEC. 5. DISALLOWANCE OF FOREIGN EQUIPMENT COSTS BY FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION.

In determining whether any charge, practice, classification, or regulation of any common carrier under title II of the Communications Act of 1934 is or will be just and reasonable, the Federal Communications Commission shall exclude from any computation of the cost of providing the service in question the costs of procurement of any telecommunications equipment or customer premises equipment that is not manufactured in the United States.

SEC. 6. DEFINITIONS.

(a) In General.—As used in this Act—

(1) Telecommunications equipment.—The term "telecommunications equipment" has the same meaning as such term has in the Modification of Final Judgment.

(2) Customer premises equipment.—The term "customer premises equipment" has the same meaning given such term in the Modification of Final Judgment.

(3) Bell operating companies.—The term "Bell operating company" has the same meaning as such term has in the Modification of Final Judgement, except that such term does not include any centralized organization for the provision of engineering, research, and administrative services, the costs of which are shared by such operating companies or their affiliates.

(4) Manufactured.—The term "manufactured" means each of the processes, other than specifying generic or functional characteristics of equipment, that are involved in bringing equipment into production and includes engineering design, product development, testing, manufacturing, engineering, and production.

(5) Manufactured in the United States.—Equipment is "manufactured in the United States" only if (A) such equipment is assembled in the United States, and (B) substantially all of the total cost of such equipment, including components, indirect costs, research, development, and labor, has been incurred in the United States.

(6) UNITED STATES.—The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense, includes the United States and any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

(7) MODIFICATION OF FINAL JUDGMENT.—The term "Modification of Final Judgment" means the judgment entered August 24, 1982, in United States v. Western Electric, Civil Action Numbered 82-0192 (United States District Court, District of Columbia).

(b) 1934 ACT DEFINITIONS APPLY.—Except as provided in subsection (a), terms used in this Act shall have the same meaning as is given such terms under the Communications Act of 1934.

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION RELATING TO THE DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, as an urgent matter, I am introducing at this time, two bills relating to the Defense Production Act.

REVIVING DEFENSE PRODUCTION AUTHORITIES

The first bill would revive the authorities of the act, which expired on October 20, 1990, and extend these authorities until June 30, 1991. It is in the nature of a simple extension of the law that evolved since 1950, and was in effect throughout the 101st Congress, except for the fact that the bill is retroactive to the date of expiration.

HOUSE-PASSED AMENDMENTS OF 1990

The second bill is identical to the DPA bill that the House passed on September 24, 1990, by a bipartisan vote of 295 to 119 (H.R. 486). The only change to that bill is in the short title, which designates the bill as "The Defense Production Act Amendments of 1991," rather than 1990, as in last year's bill.

WHY EARLY ACTION IS NEEDED

During consideration of the Defense Production Act in the 101st Congress, this body was informed repeatedly that the act should be continued without interruption. We were also urged by the administration to amend the act to modernize the statute and permit additional actions to be taken to enhance the defense industrial base and the Nation's energy security. The House bill, on the basis of cooperation by several committees, accomodated nearly all of the administration's requests.

During the final stages of consideration of the conference report on H.R. 486, Secretary of Defense Cheney addressed to the Speaker a letter stating:

> Since the commencement of Operation Desert Shield, we have been using DPA authority at least once a day to ensure that DoD orders for important items are filled in advance of competing commercial orders. We have ordered a wide variety of items under DPA ranging from night vision goggles to electronic countermeasures and radomes, from missile containers to skin decontamination kits for chemical warfare. (Letter from the Secretary of Defense, October 24, 1990).

As this body is aware, the House approved seven DPA bills in 1990, including three extensions, the substantive amendments (H.R. 486), the conference report and two corrective concurrent resolutions, Unfortunately, however, the conference report on the measure (House Report 101–933), after passing the House by voice vote on October 24, 1990, was not taken up in the Senate prior to adjournment. As a result, the DPA expired as of October 20.

The press has since reported on a wide variety of materiel required by our troops in the Persian Gulf (see, for example, "Pentagon Speeds Development, Production of Arms for Gulf Use," Washington Post, December 24, 1990, page A1).

Under circumstances well known to all, I believe this House should take the earliest possible action on the extension. As to the substantive amendments, I hope that the 1990 House-passed bill provides a firm basis for consideration and ultimate passage of the enhanced Defense Production Act for the 1990's.

SALUTE TO MARIAN LA FOLLETTE

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention to recent retirement of an outstanding legislator, California Assemblywoman Marian La Follette.

Marian served for a decade in the State legislature, and earned a reputation for hard work, her skills as a negotiator, and as an influential lawmaker. As I'm sure we'll all agree, those are skills a legislator needs to be successful, no matter in which arena those skills are used.

During her tenure in Sacramento, Marian worked hard on many issues, but concentrated her attention on three concerns of special interest: education, transportation, and criminal justice. Although she has not been successful—yet—she has been a leader in the long-overdue goal of breaking up the massive Los Angeles Unified School District into smaller districts more responsive to the community.

She is also a political survivor, having had her district carved out from under her not once but twice. Despite the odds, she carried on her fight for her principals and continued to win re-election.

Marian also can boast of many other accomplishments, including her service as president of the Los Angeles Community College District's Board of Trustees, public interest director for the Federal Home Loan Bank Board of San Francisco, vice chair of the National Advisory Council for Career Education, president of the Volunteer League of the San Fernando Valley and founding and charter president of the Northridge Guild of Children's Hospital.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure I speak for all my colleagues in wishing Marian and her husband, John, well, and in hoping they are finally able to find the time for the fishing, camping, and sailing they enjoy. She has truly earned her retirement.

REINTRODUCING THE PRIVATIZATION OF ART ACT

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, if C-Span ever decided to produce a show called "Congressional Bloopers and Practical Jokes", last session's National Endowment for the Arts [NEA] reauthorization surely would claim a starring role. The lengthy debate filled the airways with countless bloopers while the final package proved to be one big practical joke. Less than 2 months after its passage, NEA Chairman John Frohnmayer refused to uphold the legislation's decency provision, declaring that he will not be the Nation's decency czar.

I agree with Chairman Frohnmayer—he should not be a decency czar. I also believe that the American people should not be forced to sponsor specific works created by a select few. But as long as there is public funding for the arts, this will be the case. The NEA will continue to impose Government standards on art with or without decency provisions, and the American taxpayer will forever be required to finance these standards. Because it can offer only limited funding, the NEA must be selective, and, in turn, must institute standards. These standards are determined by Government officials like Mr. Frohnmayer who issue grant decisions according to their definitions of artistic merit. So while Chairman Frohnmayer may not want to be a decency czar, he is inevitably our Nation's art critic, and we are his patrons. I suggest we return American art to the eyes of its beholders and take it away from the meddlesome hands of bureaucrats. Therefore, I am reintroducing the Privatization of Art Act, a bill which would eliminate the National Endowment for the Arts.

Abolishing the NEA would not mean the demise of American art. On the contrary, it would signal the beginning of creative independence. The $175 million lost in public funds could easily be recovered by the private sector where $7 billion is spent on arts advancement each year. More artists could gain access to this money as it no longer would be tied up in NEA matching funds arrangements. And finally, not one penny of that money would be contingent on Government approval. So without the NEA, American artists would in effect be freed of Government intervention, Mr. Frohnmayer would not be crowned decency czar, and Congress would have one less practical joke to play on its constituency.

THE INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO PROVIDE A PROGRAM OF NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, nearly 50 years ago, my father stood in this Chamber and called for a program of national health insurance. The Murray-Wagner-Dingell national health insurance bill would have cured one of today's most pressing problems: The lack of health insurance for tens of millions of Americans.

I have introduced a national health insurance bill during each of the 17 Congresses that I have served this body. Today I introduced a similar bill because the need is greater than ever.

In the nearly half century following the end of World War II, this Nation has often been the preeminent force in the world economically, politically, and socially. We have rightfully claimed the title as the leader of the free world. But in the area of access to health care we have no such rightful claim. In the United States, debate rages over health insurance issues which our European friends resolved satisfactorily 50 or even 100 years ago.

Though we treat it as a luxury—even a commodity—health care is a necessity, like food and shelter. Without it people live substandard lives or perish. But as many as 60 million Americans had no proper health insurance for all or part of last year. As a result, many died or were afflicted with preventable disease. Our infant mortality rate exposes us as a prosperous country less committed to its young than some Third World countries.

The case for a national health insurance program is abundantly clear:

The current system is bloated and wasteful. We spend more and get less than any other nation. We peel off thousand dollar bills for fancy tests without a moment's hesitation, but we can't seem to scrape together a few cents for disease screening, immunizations or prenatal care. We boast over expensive state-of-the-art technology while our public hospitals burst from the weight of caring for the uninsured. With the money wasted administering our disorganized and fragmented system, significant improvements in the health of the country would be possible.

No plan will be perfect. In fact, by finding imperfection in every plan debated in this country over the past five decades critics have succeeded in bringing about a state of paralysis which has made the job harder and caused undue hardship to tens of millions of Americans. With the will to improve our health care system, the difficult details can be resolved through reasonable compromise. Delay is no longer in order; the 102d Congress is the time to begin work on a program of national health insurance.

Universal eligibility for important medical services is the cornerstone of this bill. Administration is decentralized wherever possible. Providers retain much autonomy and patients freedom of choice, but experimentation is encouraged and the entire system rationalized.

In addition to the essential provisions ensuring access to medical care, the National Health Insurance Act addresses two other critical issues. It provides a funding mechanism through a value added tax [VAT] and mandates that the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services develop methods of reducing health care costs. These two critical elements distinguish this bill from previous introduced versions and address the issue of health care reform in a serious and comprehensive manner.

Title X of the legislation would require a 5-percent value added tax to be imposed on goods and services at all levels of production and distribution. Food, clothing, and medical care would not be taxed. Additionally, an exemption is provided for exported goods to strengthen our Nation's competitive advantage, reduce the burden of unfair trade barriers, and decrease our trade deficit. Revenues generated by the VAT would be deposited in a national health insurance trust fund.

The Congressional Budget Office estimates that a 5-percent VAT tax would generate approximately $50 billion annually. While this level of funding would not be sufficient to cover the costs of the Nation's health care delivery system, it would get us off to a sound and responsible start.

In an effort to reduce costs in an effective and equitable manner, title XI directs the Secretary of Health and Human Services to provide recommendations and promulgate regulations to control the costs of providing health benefits under the act, and to emphasize medical malpractice reform as a means of cost containment.

Rarely, in our history has the need for reform been so great and so clear. Only by working together, however, can we forge the political consensus and focus the level of debate necessary to solve our shameful health care crisis. Working responsibility, intelligently, and compassionately we can solve this crisis and we can live up to the ideals worthy of the leader of the free world.

TRIBUTE TO MRS. JULETTA CHRISTOPHER

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I want to honor and pay tribute to the late Mrs. Juletta Christopher, an outstanding Murray, KY, constitutent of mine who died at age 75 on December 7 at Murray-Calloway County Hospital.

Mrs. Christopher was a longtime civic and church leader in Murray. She devoted much of her time to the First United Methodist Church in Murray.

Mrs. Christopher's son Ron Christopher is a former commonwealth attorney for Marshall and Calloway Counties in Kentucky and is a former chairman of the board of regents at Murray State University.

Mrs. Christopher's granddaughter Shannon Christopher is a receptionist and legislative assistant in our Washington office of the First Congressional District of Kentucky and a 1990 graduate of the University of Kentucky.

Other survivors are her husband Maurice P. Christopher, a longtime chemistry teacher at Murray State University; two daughters, Mrs. Camille B. Little of Heyworth, IL and Dr. Cathryn Christopher of Murray; one sister, Mrs. Harriet Schaumann, St. Louis, MO; and six other grandchildren, Susan Little, Sharon Little, Sally Little, Kelsey Christopher, Carroll Lane Christopher and Courtney Christopher.

My wife Carol and I extend to Maurice Christopher and his family our sympathy and we hope that 1991 will be a good year for each of them.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 5

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, despite the long hours of debate and the numerous votes it took for the 101st Congress to reach a final budget agreement last year, it now appears that the agreement is being abandoned.

The budget agreement raised taxes by over $165 billion—but unfortunately, this part of the agreement remains.

The budget agreement increased spending well over $700 billion—but unfortunately, this part of the agreement remains.

The budget agreement also contained enforcement mechanisms designed to force the Government to "pay-as-you-go." These provisions would prevent Congress from using money it does not even have to pay for even more programs and pork-barrel projects that it cannot afford. These provisions are the ones that some Members of Congress are trying to abandon today.

I believe that this effort to change the House rules and eliminate the Office of Management and Budget's role as a watchdog on congressional spending is a direct violation of the intent of last year's budget agreement. Additionally, I believe that this effort to weaken the enforcement provisions of the recently enacted budget agreement highlights our country's urgent need for an amendment to the U.S. Constitution requiring a balanced Federal budget. This action clearly demonstrates that statutory restrictions will not be enough to stop the tax and spend policies of recent Congresses.

I strongly oppose the effort to weaken the spending enforcement provisions of the budget agreement, and I urge my colleagues to vote against the resolution.

I also urge my colleagues of the 102d Congress to continue to push for the adoption of a balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

GARY REGIONAL AIRPORT FOREIGN TRADE ZONE PARCELS

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, today, as we begin the 102d Congress, we begin to prepare our Nation to enter the new century. Similarly, the city of Gary, IN, is also planning for the future. Therefore, I have introduced legislation that will aid in the development of the Gary Regional Airport by permitting the establishment of a foreign trade zone at the site.

The last decade was very hard on northwest Indiana and the city of Gary particularly. The recession in the early 1980's and the dramatic restructuring of the steel industry, the region's primary employer, resulted in unemployment rates that were the highest in the State. Thousands of families were forced to move to seek other opportunities.

However, as we enter the new decade, there are indications that we have turned the corner and I am optimistic about the future. In Gary, the airport is one of the cornerstones that can be utilized to revitalize the city and help enhance the economic growth of the entire region. Since being elected to Congress, I have worked with local, State and Federal officials to assist in the development of the Gary Regional Airport.

My legislation is necessary to allow the airport to utilize several of its land parcels as part of its efforts to establish a U.S. foreign trade zone at the facility. It has been brought to my attention that restrictions were placed upon the parcels in the 1940's when they were transferred to the city by the War Assets Administration.

Today, all agree that these restrictions are dated and removing them will improve the ability of the airport to progress. The Gary Regional Airport has made significant strides in recent years and I commend all those associated with the airport on their efforts:

H.R. 5868

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. RELEASE OF CERTAIN RESTRICTIONS.

(a) RELEASE.—Notwithstanding section 126 of the Federal Airport Act (as in effect on May 29, 1947), the Secretary of Transportation is authorized to grant a release or releases, without monetary consideration, with respect to the restrictions, requirements, and conditions imposed on the property described in subsection (b) by a quitclaim deed conveying such property to the city of Gary, county of Lake, Indiana, dated May 29, 1947.

(b) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—Those lands incorporated in Reconstruction Finance Corporation project known as Tracts A and C of Plancer 1035, Rubber Synthetics, Gary, Indiana (WAA No. R-Ind. 6), legally described as follows:

That part of the East One Half (E½) of Section Thirty-five (35), Township Thirty-seven (37), Range Nine (9) West, of the Second Principal Meridian, lying between the C.L.S. & E. Railroad and the Grand Calumet River, and that part of the West One Half (W½) of Section Thirty-six (36), Township Thirty-seven (37), Range Nine (9) West, lying between the U.S. Highway No. 12 and the Grand Calumet River, and that part of the Southeast Quarter (SE¼) of Section Thirty-six (36), Township Thirty-seven (37), Range Nine (9) West, lying between U.S. Highway No. 12 and the Grand Calumet River, and that part of the Southeast Quarter (SE¼) of Section Twenty-six (26), Township Thirty-seven (37), Range Nine (9) West, lying between the C.L.S. & E. Railroad and U.S. Highway No. 12, all in the City of Gary, Lake County, Indiana. Tract A is composed of 476.885 acres, and Tract C is composed of 133.971 acres. Total area is approximately 610 acres, with all its appurtenances, being a part of the same property acquired by the Defense Plant Corporation under that certain Warranty Deed executed by the Gary Land Company, an Indiana corporation, dated August 25, 1942, and filed for record in the Recorder's Office of Lake County, Indiana, on October 9, 1942, as Document No. 742127, in Book No. 666, Page 278, and that certain Warranty Deed executed by the Elgin, Joliet and Eastern Railroad Company, an Illinois and Indiana corporation, dated December 22, 1942, and filed for record in the Recorder's Office of Lake County, Indiana, on December 23, 1942, as Document No. 82584, in Book 670, Page 68.

COLA FOR DISABLED VETERANS

HON. BOB STUMP

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, today 225 House Members are joining with SONNY MONTGOMERY and me to introduce a clean COLA bill for service-connected disabled veterans. In the closing days and hours of the 101st Congress, the veterans' COLA unexpectedly became a hostage to unrelated agent orange legislation. The Senate did not act on the COLA approved by the House in H.R. 5326, and our attempt the day before adjournment to keep the COLA alive in a second House bill, H.R. 5962, fell victim to an objection to our unanimous-consent request.

Our clean bill has nothing in it but the noncontroversial COLA which disabled verterans need immediately. They should have had a 5.4-percent COLA effective January 1, 1991, and our bill would make that COLA retroactive to January 1. This bill is the top priority of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee and obviously has widespread support. We intend to move it at the earliest opportunity. What happened to the veterans' COLA was shameful and inexcusable.

Other matters should be considered on their own merits, so they do not make service-connected veterans wait for adjustments in monthly disability payments. It is wrong to hold the COLA hostage. I strongly urge my colleagues to help us provide veterans their COLA.

SALUTE TO LARRY HORNER

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a good friend and an outstanding public servant, Lawrence Horner, who recently concluded 16 years of service on the Thousand Oaks City Council.

During his long and distinguished career, Larry served three times as mayor, was instrumental in continuing the careful planning that Thousand Oaks is so noted for, and served on a variety of regional and local boards and commissions, including the Conejo Open Space Conservation Agency, the Cultural Facility Committee, and the Southern California Association of Governments.

And despite his time-consuming occupation as vice president of Northrop Corp., Larry always found time for community involvement as well. He has served the Conejo Valley Historical Society, the California Lutheran University Community Leaders Club, the Conejo Valley and Westlake Chambers of Commerce, the Conejo Future Foundation, the Westlake Joint Board of Homeowners Association, the Westlake Athletic Association, the Arts Council, the Thousand Oaks Jaycees, and the Cal Lutheran Council of Advisers.

As he leaves the city council, Larry can be proud of his many achievements, and the knowledge that his city is a better place because of him. It's the Larry Horners of the world, quietly and efficiently getting things done, who make a difference in government.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting Larry for his hard work and conscientious public service to his community.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS FOR SPOUSES OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill to bring back fairness and impartiality to the Federal Government. In recent years we have seen an abuse of the Constitution that unfortunately is becoming a standard for the future. I am referring to Presidential appointment of spouses of Members of Congress.

The Constitution of the United States and more specifically, article 1, section 6, subparagraph 96 states:

> No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any Civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time.

While this statement is directed toward Members of Congress in its prohibition of a dual interest, this same abuse occurs when the spouse of a Member accepts an appointed office. In the time honored tradition of marriage, the union of a man and a woman is sacred for one reason. That reason is the transformation of two individuals into a single entity. It is this entity that the Founding Fathers settled upon when the Constitution was written, and as a single entity, the conflict of interest concern certainly remains.

President James Madison in his earlier days at the Federal Convention, was a strong proponent of the separation of the administrative and legislative branches. He stated:

> If you have no exclusive clause, there may be no danger of creating offices or augmenting the stipends of those already created, in order to gratify some members if they were not excluded. Such an instance has fallen within my own observation. I am therefore of opinion, that no office ought to be open to a member, which may be created or augmented while he is in the legislature.

It is without a doubt, that the attendees of the Federal Convention were trying to avoid a segment of the British governmental system that proved to be corrupt. Mr. Pierce Butler representing South Carolina at the convention further elaborated on the corruption that our newly born country was trying to avoid. In his remarks, he stated:

> We have no way of judging mankind but by experience. Look at the history of the government of Great Britain, where there is a very flimsy exclusion—Does it not ruin their government? A man takes a seat in parliament to get an office for himself or friends, or both; and this is the great source from which flows its great venality and corruption.

It is clear that our forefathers were trying to avoid corruption and undue influence. If a Member has a spouse working in the administration, then isn't he or she likely subject to such influence. A series of checks and balances were incorporated into the Constitution to protect the citizens of this country from a corrupt government. We must remember that we are the representatives of our constituents who voted us into office, and we owe it to them to remain free from undue pressure.

A MESSAGE TO RESERVISTS AND THEIR FAMILIES

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues an important message that was given to reservists by one of the Federal savings banks in my district. Carrollton Federal Bank will suspend all debts, without penalty, for reservists who are called to active duty in Operation Desert Shield.

Mr. Speaker, this message of cooperation and generosity is sorely needed during the Persian Gulf crisis. I would encourage banks and savings associations around the country to adopt a similar policy of cooperation for our men and women in arms.

> A MESSAGE TO RESERVISTS AND THEIR FAMILIES FROM CARROLLTON FEDERAL
>
> These are difficult days, filled with uncertainty, frustration, and a sense of sad remembrances.
>
> They are particularly difficult for members of the Armed Forces Reserves called up in this Persian Gulf crisis.
>
> To ease worries and lessen hardships resulting from an abrupt loss of income, Carrollton Federal Bank is immediately suspending loan payments for activated reservists.
>
> While on active duty, you will not have to make principal or interest payments on Carrollton Federal home mortgages, auto loans, credit balances, or personal loans and lines of credit incurred before activation. Simply call our Mortgage Loan Service Department or Consumer Loan Department to make arrangements.
>
> When you're deactivated, you can pick up your obligations where you left off—with no penalties whatsoever. We sincerely hope you will able to resume your normal life just as easily.
>
> And that a peaceful world—which seemed so close a few short weeks ago—will indeed be possible.
>
> Cary D. Dorminey, President.

FREEDOM OF CHOICE ACT

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, today I and a bipartisan group of over 80 Members of the House introduced the Freedom of Choice Act of 1991. The purpose of the bill is to codify Roe versus Wade and to prohibit States from restricting the right of women to choose whether or not to terminate a pregnancy.

The bill is identical to the bill we introduced in the 101st Congress, which was the subject of several hearings in the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights and which was reported favorably by the subcommittee to the full Judiciary Committee at the end of the last session.

The bill is a response to the Supreme Court's 1989 ruling in the Webster case, which prompted a number of State legislatures to introduce, and in several cases enact, restrictive antichoice legislation.

I believe a Federal statutory standard is essential to prevent further erosion of the right to choose. This fundamental right should not vary from State to State. The subcommittee plans to move quickly in the 102d Congress to assure enactment of this important legislation.

NATURAL GAS LEGISLATION TO STOP UNFAIR REFUND CLAIMS

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 3, 1991

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing legislation to prevent the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission from requiring natural gas producers, royalty owners and the Texas State Treasury—which collects gas severance taxes—to pay refunds as a result of a recent Federal court of appeals decision in the Fifth Circuit. Such a refund requirement could easily cost Texans many millions of dollars.

Under the terms of the court decision, a 1986 FERC order—Order 451—was vacated because the Court ruled that the Commission overstepped its authority by allowing the price of natural gas drilled before January 1, 1973 to rise to market level. It would be blatantly unfair to require Texas gas producers and taxpayers, as well as those in other producing States, to be penalized for doing exactly what the FERC told them they could do—raise the price of old gas.

Whether the court of appeals was correct in finding fault with the FERC action remains subject to debate and further appeal. My point in introducing this measure, however, is to make sure that the State of Texas, its taxpayers, royalty owners and natural gas producers are treated fairly, and not held liable for a regulatory agency's error.

My bill will protect the original sellers of old gas affected by the FERC order from claims which are anticipated to follow the court ruling. Without this prohibition, the State of Texas, which earns substantial royalty income from gas produced on State lands, could expect royalty refund claims from producers required to make refunds to the first purchasers of their old gas. It also protects the millions of dollars in natural gas severance tax revenues collected by millions of dollars in natural gas severance tax revenues collected by the State of Texas based on the increased gas prices.

I recognize that the FERC order was an attempt to rectify the old gas pricing system, which contributed to market distortion and thwarted attempts to replace depleted gas reserves. This market disorder actually led Congress to enact legislation, which I was proud to support, which decontrolled all natural gas prices.

But, by acting to vacate the FERC order after Congress decontrolled all natural gas, the court has set the stage for massive market disruption. It is ironic that in its decision, the court said that "which we remain poignantly aware that the problems facing the natural gas industry are numerous and complex, we nevertheless emphasize that Congress alone has the power to do—or authorize to do—what the Commission has done" in its orders.

Congress has now decontrolled old gas. What I now ask is that Congress direct the FERC to prohibit refunds. Neither the taxpayers in Texas and other producing States, nor our struggling domestic energy industry should be made to suffer for a bureaucratic error.

I invite my colleagues to join me in this effort.

H.R. —
